DA-DAN!

IT'S ME, CHARLOTTE THE GODFORSAKEN. WELCOME TO THE FIRST ISSUE OF GAMES FOR FREAKS! WE'RE FINALLY HERE, HUH? LET'S LOOK AROUND!

Thanks Charlie.

Happy Halloween to all my ghouls together, writhing in the mud. We are going to make it.. If you picked up this magazine out of nowhere, you might be very confused. That's ok. It's a semiannual game zine containing content for some or all the games I've published. It'll come out when I feel like it. It might even have Lancer content some day!

Our first edition has a new faction for Maleghast, the Steeplewracks, and a cool new Virtue system for CAIN. Enjoy!

FILTH PIT LISTENING CORNER

Vitriol - Suffer and Become 2024

If you know anything about me, you'd know this band is my current obsession. Managed to catch them live in Atlanta and it was like getting eviscerated by the double bass. The production on their previous albums sounds like dogwater despite the phenomenal talent on display, but this one has finally crystallized an incredibly visceral and unique style. In a field dominated by tiktok driven deathcore sound, this more classic, insanely talented tech death outfit is a fucking winner. Completely relentless from start to finish, I'll be listening to this for a while.

Cattle Decapitation - Terrasite 2023

A powerful showing from one of the best bands in metal, Travis Ryan has taken the vocal style he has pioneered and continues to push it to incredible places. This album has a killer variety of sound and riff that elevates it over their older, more deathgrind style work, incorporating clean sections and that signature misanthropic melancholia that has come to define this band.

Inhabiting the wicked spires and spindly reaches of Anzenmezzeron's rickety upper strata, the feral Steeplewracks are part cult, part affliction. They worship the enormous flesh-eating owls that prowl the highest levels of the city, holding them in godlike reverence and even offering their own flesh and bodies as sustenance.

Their necromancers draw their power from these owls, who in turn draw their power from other, darker forces of the antediluvian world. One does not choose to become a steeplewrack, but instead is called to it. Those that find their fragile minds bending under the weight of gore and unrelenting slaughter of the city below sometimes see a color, called the Red Wet Hue. It consumes their thoughts and waking hours, drawing them ever upwards. It is then that they meet the owls.

Rip Aport (XO: This ability gains extra bonuses if X or more allied units or walls are adjacent to the target, including this one.

Other Mechanics

- Push: Involuntarily push unit a number of spaces, as long as each space of the push is further from the pushing unit or effect than the last space. Does not count as moving.
- Pull: Involuntarily pull unit a number of spaces, as long as each space of the pull is closer to the pulling unit or effect than the last space. Does not count as moving.
- Splash: Affects all adjacent units, but not the target. Can be splash (target) or splash (self).
- Speed (token): MOVE +2 more space when MOVEing, discard one after MOVEing
- Strength (token): +1 damage, discard one after dealing damage
- SOULless: A soulless unit doesn't grant SOUL, doesn't leave a corpse, and cannot be used for body block.
- Summon: Summoned units are usually created by abilities. When summoning a unit, place it on the battlefield in a free space in range. Summoning a unit doesn't count as it moving or entering a space. Summoned units are SOULLESS and may be activated in the round after their summoning.
- Wall: Terrain type. Blocks movement and line of sight. Can be targeted and destroyed as a character but does not trigger effects, and has 2 hp.

IF ONE IS GIVEN TO PROPRITIATION, IT IS BEST TO CHOOSE EARTHLY GODS -Admin

By any human standard, exorcists are terrifying living weapons: able to kill with a gesture or bend the laws of reality to their whim. However, as the fiendish and abominable power of their quarry usually vastly exceeds their individual capabilities, the organization is well known internally for having a high fatality rate. The attrition of junior exorcists, recruited from the population at large on short notice, and usually criminally underprepared for their mission, is extreme. To certain factions of CAIN's senior leadership, this brutal reality is convenient: it has the dual purpose of culling potential threats to the organization, and also weeding out the weak from the strong.

Many survivors of this grueling process collapse under pressure and find it impossible to make it to high category before the mental and physical burden becomes too much to bear, but a tiny minority of exorcists snap, break, and reform - becoming something stronger and more terrifying. These make up the senior ranks of exorcists, those that have advanced to category 4 or higher. Efficient and ruthless hunters, these prized tools of CAIN are informally nicknamed 'Blackcoats' for the long 'Well' overcoat they typically wear. The blackcoats are a tiny minority of CAIN's main force. Yet from a tiny minory of their ranks comes something entirely else. Something verging on the inhuman - those that have faced horror time and time again and survived where dozens or scores of their comrades were cut down and devoured. These exorcists of category 6 or above are exceptional throughout history and number only a few.

Deemed virtues, they are treated as weapons of last resort by the organization, dispatched to deal with threats that would mean the deaths of thousands or even hundreds of thousands. They are kept in reserve on CAIN's orbital rail facility, SERAPH, on strict three part rotation cycles of highly supervised shore leave, training, and cryogenic freezing so as to extend their lifespans, hone their powers through mental conditioning and dreamspace training, and heal their injuries. Well known throughout the organization, they are in turn idolized and feared by its ranks at large and have outsize influence on the rank and file of CAIN, even if they have no official power, and are in the end, merely the sharpest sword the organization has in its sheath.

USING THE VIRTUES

This is an optional game system for campaigns of CAIN, intended to offer an NPC-centric alternate progression path for characters. If you wish to include Virtues in your game, you can choose to include any or all of them. There are 6 in total. Virtues are never intended to show up in a mission (most of the missions player exorcists embark on are too small scale, even the high threat ones!), outshine the player characters, or undertake actions that would undermine the player characters.

Instead, they are intended to play a role of a background mentor character that the players characters might interact with, idolize, emulate, or study under during their time between missions.

Similar characters from fiction: Kishibe from Chainsaw man Kakashi Haitake from Naruto Satoru Gojo from Jujutsu Kaisen

> There are examples given here for the personality and appearance of Virtues but you can tweak or change their personality, gender, or appearance for your own game, as long as you keep the parts of their bond intended for gameplay (see below) consistent. I use third person gender neutral pronouns for them since I have a 'canon' idea of who they are in my version of CAIN, but I want you (the players and Admin) to figure who they are for your table.

VIRTUE BOND

If you include Virtues in your game, characters can bond with them during the course of their CAIN career. This could take the form of studying under them or getting to know them in their off time.

Alternately, player characters might never interact with a Virtue, but might choose to emulate them and their values instead, in an effort to follow in their footsteps, or even surpass them. A character doesn't have to bond with a virtue, but if they do, they can pick which virtue they are bonding with at the start of any mission. They immediately get the benefit of the level 0 bond with a virtue. If they survive the mission, they can increase their bond with the virtue by 1, up to a maximum of 3, and gain each correlated bond ability as they do. A character will therefore have to run three missions and survive to finish a bond.

A character can bond with different virtues each mission if they so desire. These bond benefits remain even if the character isn't currently bonding with that virtue (or any virtue), and become a permanent part of the character.

Strictures

During the mission, a character that's attempting to increase a bond with a virtue must follow that virtue's strictures. A stricture invites a penalty or restriction on a character's actions. A character can ignore a stricture when making an action roll by taking 1d3 stress, which cannot be reduced in any way, but cannot cause injuries.

High Blasphemies

At certain levels of bond, characters can gain access to unique blasphemy powers, weaker versions of the extremely powerful and unique high blasphemies manifested by the virtues.

Any blasphemy power gained as part of a bond with a virtue still counts as a blasphemy, but doesn't increase a character's xp cap or reduce their sin overflow cap (it's 'free' so to speak).

High blasphemies typically require spending all your remaining psyche bursts, with a minimum of 1. Sin cannot be used to compensate for these bursts.

STRICTURES

Ignore for one roll by taking 1d3 nonlethal stress

You cannot ignore orders from a superior. Always roll 0d on any action that would break the law.

BOND ABILITIES

Gain an extra xp trigger: Did you uphold the dogma of CAIN?

Gain the Law blasphemy. You can use it once a mission.

Lower sin by 1 after halving it. If you executed a sin rather than sparing it, then lower sin by 1 again. If you spared a sin or failed to execute it, increase sin by 1d3 after halving it instead.

You may choose two different effects for Law.

Justice is generally regarded as the most powerful exorcist in CAIN's current arsenal, a loner of few words given extreme leeway in engagement and unusual permission to roam. This is because Justice's high blasphemy, Law, will not allow them to disobey orders from a superior in any form, making them the perfect attack dog. They have the most recorded executions in CAIN history and a near-flawless fight record, standing as an object of awe amongst the regular rank and file.

For the most part, they seem to regard their position as an accepted reality and have come to embody their role as the headsman of CAIN. They are exceedingly efficient and the overwhelming nature of their abilities allows them to trivialize even the most tenebrous of opponents.

It is commonly theorized that Temerity has a special subdivision entirely commited to the contingency >that Justice manages to circumvent their own blasphemy.

You set a rule of physical reality that affects everything in a circular area around you, called the Court, with a radius equal to CAT. Any changes made take place instantly and persist inside the area, but the area itself does not move. This power can always eliminate, destroy, or totally change mundane beings, objects or structures. Strong willed or supernatural beings such as exorcists or sins can partly resist its effects, but humans are always affected instantly. If you exit the area or the scene ends, the effect ends.

BOND ABILITIES

Once a mission, if you are able to eat sweets, you can relieve 1 sin.

You gain the Null blasphemy. You can use it once a mission.

Sin overflow only reduces your sin overflow cap by 1 instead of 2.

When you so choose, your Null Blasphemy becomes the Immaculate Defiance of Heaven. This choice is irreversible.

Faith is not only an anomaly within CAIN, they are also an anomaly for the world at large. They were born in a village in eastern Europe in 1672 and were at a young age forced to joined a monastic order due to the suspicion that they were cursed or consorting with the Devil. No matter how old Faith grew, they never seem to age about past their early 20s and remained a picture of peak physical health and fitness, manifesting supernatural strength and constitution. After they become a hermit around a hundred years after their birth, they were discovered by an early CAIN, where it was determined they were the only purely Graceless and Sinless individual in the entire world.

Most humans manifest a tiny amount of grace or Sin due to latent psychic trauma, but Faith is a complete void. It is now theorized that this is because they have an 'anti-blasphemy', a blasphemy that absorbs all others. This has made them completely immune to psychic phenomena and also biologically immortal.

Faith has the lowest confirmed kills of any virtue. It is rumored that CAIN uses them mostly for capture and control missions of rogue binders, something they seem to be terrifyingly effective at.

Instant, Charm, 1 scene

Spend all your remaining psyche bursts (min 1). For the duration of the scene, you become completely immune to psychic phenomena. Anything inflicting physical harm, like the physical attacks of Sins, can affect you normally. For example, you could be harmed by a thrown piece of furniture or a bullet, but not by a blast of purely psychic energy or a form of mind control. You cannot be affected by afflictions (though they still remain on you, their abilities are merely suppressed for the scene). In return, for the duration, you cannot use or be affected by any blasphemy other than this one, including those from your allies, and any currently affecting you end. Unlike other powers, you cannot end this effect early.

At the start of a mission, you can pick an agenda ability from any other party member. For the rest of the mission, you can use this agenda ability as your own.

Powers that target 'self' can now target any exorcist you are Entwined with.

THE TWINS

A widely feared Virtue, Charity immediately stands out among their peers due to their unique situation. Charity is functionally the same person that occupies two bodies - or alternately two separate people with the exact same personality and physical appearance down to each individual strand of hair. They may even share emotions and may pre-emptively react or talk from one or the other body as if by reflex. This is because Charity's high blasphemy, Entwine, while extremely powerful, forces a merger of its users so that over time, they become pefect twins - an amalgam of the two, blended together, physically and mentally. Since Charity's abilities work over any distance, they are often deployed separately to different engagements across the globe, although they prefer to work together.

It is common knowledge that there have been several generations of Charities over the years, since at least 1850, and neither of their bodies are the original. When one dies, CAIN mandates a replacement from a select pool.

By bonding with Charity, you have put yourself on this list. Congratulations.

ENTWINE

Instant, 1 mission

You entangle your mind with another's in a loving embrace. Without spending a psyche burst, choose another willing exorcist. For the duration of the mission, gain the following effects:

- spend or assign it to either person, no matter the distance. Harm, stress, etc, supernaturally appears on each other's bodies. Anything transferred like this cannot be reduced in any way.
- any strong emotion they feel reflexively, even involuntarily.

BOND ABILITIES

You never roll 0d for inflicting harm or violence (always roll at least 1d)

Any amount of harm you inflict is instantly fatal to humans.

You gain the Strength blasphemy. You can use it safely once a mission. If you use it a second time, when the scene ends, you rip apart from the inside and suffer instant death.

You can safely use Strength a second time.

THE DISASTER

Deemed 'reserve calamity level elimination weapon', and one of the only exorcists in history deemed close to exceeding category 7 in their abilities, Fortitude is kept on a strict freezing cycle. An extremely volatile and potent fighter, their ability to execute sins is only matched by their thirst for complete, unbridled destruction. Unleashing fortitude on a situation is often the equivalent of trying to crack a walnut with a factory grade hydraulic press.

Fortitude's high blasphemy, Strength, allows them unparalleled physical abilities, but without proper training, its users can literally tear themselves apart. Their marked disregard for human life and rampant misanthropy have made them relatively unpopular within the upper ranks of the organization and they have relatively few admirers even amongst the more pessimistic junior exorcists.

> There is a special division of CASTLE's weapon division deemed 'Break Division' dedicated to 'tempering' weapons for Fortitude to use, as without proper materials they cannot withstand the physical forces involved. The specialized research team takes great joy in their work and their discoveries have greatly advanced CAIN's armaments.

STRENGTH

Charm, 1 scene

A rare mutation of the Amplify blasphemy, this ability allows the very flesh and blood of its wielder to be infused with grace, pushing them past impossible limits. Without proper training, using this blasphemy will cause internal organs to violently burst from the body.

Spend all your remaining psyche bursts (min 1).

For the remainder of the scene, your mundane physical abilities are now equal to CAT and fighting sins with mundane forces is no longer hard.

- You can push any physical action to CAT+2 instead by gaining 2d3 stress. This could inflict an injury.
- All weapons you use break after use unless specifically tempered. You can temper your any weapon between missions by spending 1 scrip per weapon.

HIGH BLASPHEMY:

STRICTURES

Ignore for one roll by taking 1d3 nonlethal stress

You cannot take actions that would be loud or attract attention. You roll 0d for set up actions

BOND ABILITIES

Once a mission, you can re-roll any action taken in stealth or to avoid notice, taking the second result as final.

Gain the Veil blasphemy. You can use it once a mission.

Mundane humans always forget you were there if you are out of sight for 77 seconds or more. You cannot turn this ability off.

You can use Veil to erase memory for longer periods. See the table on the following page.

Hope is among the most valuable assets that CAIN possesses. Typically blessed with strong precognitive and telepathic abilities, their ability to shoulder the Veil high blasphemy has been a lynchpin of the organization's activity for hundreds of years and has allowed CAIN to operate in secrecy even in the most dire of circumstances.

Unlike most other blasphemies, the full power of Veil can be imbued and passed on to other wielders, picked from a pool of exorcists of extreme mental and cognitive strength. There have been a long line of Hopes (the current is the fourty first) since the organization's inception, and they are typically retired* when the stress of Veil proves too much to bear.

Due to their important role in the organization, Hope is never permitted to leave the orbital station SERAPH unless under extreme circumstances, or once a year at Christmas.

*See CASTLE doctrine note C0447

When used at its full capacity, Veil can erase and rework the memory of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of people, for days at a time. This use typically kills Hope.

MASS MEMORY RUPTURE

At bond rank III, you can push veil for longer periods. If you do, you must pay the associate cost, listed on the right side. Costs are cumulative. Good luck out there.

STRICTURES

Ignore for one roll by taking 1d3 nonlethal stress

You must honor all deals and promises. Roll 0d when choosing violence over negotiation.

BOND ABILITIES

When you shake hands with a willing human on a deal or promise, if someone breaks it, they suffer instant death. This applies to you, and both you and your target are aware of the effects.

Gain the Shake blasphemy. You can use it once a mission.

Your rank 0 ability now applies to exorcists and sins.

You can use Shake once again during a mission, but if you do, the GM picks the game.

THE NEGOTIATOR

The wielder of the powerful Shake blasphemy, Prudence is an amicable and charismatic Virtue with a very busy schedule. Aside from being a powerful combatant, Prudence serves a vital role in both CAIN's internal structure and its relationship with mundane governments due to their unique ability to enforce deals. They have multiple cover identities, speak multiple languages, and generally have a very light freezing schedule, as CAIN deploys them on long range and long duration missions. When appearing in public, they are always exceptionally well dressed and spoken.

As CAIN's front facing emissary to human governments, their identity has been an object of speculation amongst online conspiracy theorists, something the organization has tried vehemently to suppress.

It is unclear why "SHAKE" works off playground games, but it is rumored to be related to a inherent desire in humans to play, the 'homo ludens' theory.

You may spend all your remaining psyche bursts to instantly enforce a game from the list below on yourself and all other humans, sins, or exorcists in range determined by CAT. Breaking the rules of the game causes excruciating pain, hemorrhaging, and eventually death. As long as the rule applies:

SHAKE

- breaking the rule with your actions
- could inflict injuries as normal.
- In return:
- instantly. They are aware of this effect.
- a conflict scene.

You cannot end this effect early, and it lasts for the scene.

King of the Hill (Must stay inside a small area). Look No Hands (Don't Use Your Hands).

HIGH BLASPHEMY:

• for you and allies, actions become harder when you must avoid

• If through your actions you or an ally intentionally breaks the rule, you take 2d3 stress, which cannot be reduced in any way and

• If the target, through their actions, breaks a rule intentionally, they take 1d3 slashes on their execution talisman. Humans are killed

• You may set up an ally for free, three times, while the rule is active, and without rolling. Describe how you are taking advantage of the rule. Any normal effects of setup apply to these special setup actions, and you can take them without counting is as an action in

GAMES

- The Floor is Lava (Don't Touch the Ground).
- Reverse Tag (Don't touch a sin, human, or exorcist).
- No Talking Contest (Don't speak or make loud noises).
- Marco Polo (Don't open eyes. Targets must say 'Polo' when you say 'Marco' and cannot stray from short range from you).
- Red Light Green Light (Those affected by the rule see a phantom red and green light and are forced to stop moving on red light).
