

DEFENSE OF WYSLOKA

Wysloka, Poland, September 2, 1939: Operation Fall Weiss was underway and a great initial success. Everywhere the German panzer, motorized and infantry troops were advancing, the birth of blitzkrieg was seemingly a success. The 2nd Panzer Division advanced out of Spytkowice through the village of Wysloka. Upon reaching the village the leading German units ran into well dug in AT defenses. The defenses augmented by a group of officer students. Snipers played havoc with the exposed tankers and supporting infantry, especially the officers. The Poles had set up a hedge hog defense in the village, fortifying the village, allowing the Germans to capture the heights. Late in the day, the German artillery began shelling the village, setting part of it aflame, causing severe casualties among the defenders. However, the AT Guns, AT Rifles and even artillery guns firing over open sights were able to take out a large number of German tanks.

THE FIRST INVASION OF GERMANY

Koenigsdorf, 09/10/1939-09/20/39
Foto: Wagner 1 September 1939

Koenigsdorf, Germany, September 2, 1939: The German invasion of Poland was underway. The German assault did not just consist of armored spearheads and infantry and swarms of airplanes denoting the typical blitzkrieg operation. In many secondary areas only border guards and garrison troops tentatively advanced across the border to hold the Polish units in place to allow for other units to advance against weaker opposition. In the area of Lezno, the 71st Armored Battalion equipped with obsolete equipment tussled with the 2nd line German troops including a number of Fifth Columnists. The Poles were able to hold the town and beat back the attackers. The 2nd platoon of armored cars and a company from the III/55th Battalion pushed into Germany chasing the retreating Germans, accomplishing the first invasion of Germany in World War 2. The Poles tangled with some more border forces, knocked out a few cars before falling back into Poland. The first invasion, though limited in scope was a success.

JAKACKING ASS

Jakack Poland, September 11, 1939: Kampfgruppe Kempf was moving towards the town of Andrzejewo through the village of Jakack. The Polish 71st Infantry Regiment of the 18th Division was dug in on the western outskirts of the village. The Polish defenders had a number of AT Guns and AT Rifles hidden from sight in ambush positions. A sergeant Solokoski manned a 37mm Bofors AT Gun around some farmbuildings along the main road entering the village. As the leading elements of the German troops came into view, Solokoski targetted on the lead armored car. Bang the car brewed up. Quickly switching targets, the Polish AT Gunner soon knocked out 2 more cars, a trio of trucks and a armored half track. The Germans recoiled against the sudden onslaught, fell back, regrouped, spread out and assaulted the village. The Poles skillfully relocated themselves, meeting each thrust with concentrated fire. Throughout the day, the defenders stopped repeated German assaults, finally falling back as night came on and the Germans has begun to flank the defenders.

Andrzejewo Poland, September 13, 1939: The Battle of Andrzejewo took place from the 12th to the 14th of September in north-eastern Poland. The Germans succeeded in encircling and annihilating the Polish 18th Infantry Division, which was attempting to break through the encirclement. The Poles attempted to break out by fighting south from Letowinca towards Czyzew and most of the fighting occurred in Andrzejewo, which changed hands 6 times over 3 days. German aerial bombardment set Letowinca aflame as the Poles attempted to hold the town as a rearguard while the remainder of the division advanced. The Poles were caught in a pincer movement as they moved forward, German panzers and infantry assaulting from west and east against them. 500 German soldiers captured in earlier fighting were released from captivity and 5000 Poles were forced to surrender. The Poles could take pride from the fact that it took 4 German divisions including panzer and motorized infantry to destroy them and still a significant of Poles escaped to fight another day.

Brzesc, Poland, September 14, 1939: In September 1939, the Polish army utilized a small number of obsolete French manufactured light tanks, mostly in garrison, second line units. The 2nd Armored Battalion had 3 companies of light tanks, equipped with Renault FT-17 tanks. Their mobilization was completed on September 6th and they were transported by rail towards Brzesc on the Bug River. Aerial bombing on the railroad forced the unloading of two companies at Lukow on the 9th but the disintegrating Polish defenses forced a withdraw to the east where they finally arrived at Brzesc and were set up to defend the fortress there. The light tanks were deployed in defensive positions on the northern portion of the City, expecting an attack at any moment. The German 10th Panzer Division attacked Brzesc on the 14th September. 12 tanks FT-17 of 113. company, deployed in the gardens to the north of the Citadel in Brzesc, were destroyed fighting against German II Battalion, 8th Panzer Regiment. However, by the 16th, after all-day combat, the Polish units abandoned the citadel. A breakthrough attempt by the remaining tanks failed, so they were abandoned.

TAKE THE FLAG!

Laski, Poland, September 20, 1939: The battle of the Kampinos forest raged for 3 days and nights as Polish units struggled to reach Warsaw. On Tuesday the 19th, the Polish cavalry units under a General Abraham had reached the eastern edges of the forest north of Warsaw. Through the night and into the early morning the Polish cavalry and mounted light infantry successfully captured the village of Sierakow. The next step was to capture and move through the village of Laki, which was the last major roadblock in front of the capital. But the village was strongly defended. Late in the day, the commander of the 14th Ulan Regiment decided to make one last cavalry charge in true equestrian spirit. The Poles lined up in the edge of the woods, drew sabers and prepared to charge. As the troops galloped across the tundra, they were met with heavy fire, the regimental commander turned to see his standard bearer, Corporal Maziarski, plunging to the ground. The Corporal yelled "TAKE THE FLAG!" Corporal Czech ignored the flying bullets, turned his horse, rode back, grabbed the standard and lead his squadron through the German defenses. The Poles had made it.

Chwedkowice, Poland, September 17, 1939: On September 14, 1939, elements of the XIX Panzer Corps reached the area of Brzesc, which was defended by a small force under General Plisowski, while Kobryn was defended by an improvised division under Colonel Epler. Early on the 14th, Colonel Epler received a report of German forces entering the area. Elements of the German XIX Panzer Corps were advancing on the towns of Brzesc and Kobryn as well as toward an important railway junction located at the village of Zabinka. To Epler ordered the 2nd battalion of his 84th Infantry Regiment to commence a delaying action in the area of Zabinka train station. At the same time the 2nd battalion of 83rd Infantry Regiment was ordered to organize a defensive line along the Troszcanica river. On September 15, the German 3rd Armored Division encountered and destroyed a column of light artillery. However, Epler's forces were not spotted until late evening of that day, when they were bombarded by the Luftwaffe. The following day the main force of the German XIX Corps arrived. After a brief skirmish the Germans fell back and regrouped. At dawn of September 17, 1939, the reconnaissance units of the German 2nd Motorized Infantry Division finally reached the Polish lines. After a short skirmish the Poles withdrew behind the defensive positions guarded by the 2nd battalion of the 83rd Infantry Regiment. The Germans then tried to outflank the Poles by attacking the cemetery in the village of Chwedkowice, but were repelled with light losses, mostly due to direct fire from the Polish 100mm howitzers.

HURRAH!

VICTORY CONDITIONS: The Polish player wins at game end if there are no GO German units on board 10 and he controls the 18oK8 building.

Krasnobod, Poland, September 23, 1939: One of the last cavalry battles of the Polish campaign and probably in history occurred in the early hours of September 23rd in the fields around the village of Krasnobod. Late the previous evening the Nowogrodzka Cavalry Brigade arrived in the area. Early the next morning the battle spread like wildfire. Moving through early morning mist, the 2nd Squadron swept through the defenses in the village. The Poles reached the outskirts of the village and machine gun fire sprayed forth. With a great shout "HURRAH!", the mounted troops charged forward into the town, scattering the German defenders who were shocked at the ferocity of the horse borne attack. The Uhlans, mounted on small sturdy, tan horses, lances at the ready, surged on in a headlong gallop, their flat steel helmets protecting their heads, the dreaded four edged pike of their lances glinting in the sunlight. The Germans retreated back to a defensive position on a hill centered on a monastery. Just then a force of Prussian cavalry arrived. Like mounted knights of old, the Polish on their light, nimble mounts, dodged and thrust amidst the heavy warhorse of the Germans. Sabers flashed, pistols fired, cries of pain from humans mixing with wounded animals make a gruesome image of battle. The turning point comes when Corporal Mikalojewski cut down the German commander with a saber. The German cavalry fell back and the monastery soon fell.

ASSAULT ON FORT IX

Szack, Poland, September 28, 1939: The Polish city of Szack was defended by a number of fortified strong points. The German 10th Infantry Regiment was assigned the task of assaulting and reducing Fort number IX. The fort was assaulted from several directions at once. From the north the 3rd Platoon, 2nd Company, 88th Pioneer Battalion assaulted across a causeway but were stopped with heavy losses. The 1st Platoon attempted to cross the water filled AT Ditch on pneumatic boats supported by machine gun and mortar fire. During the first assault the first boat didn't even reach the water before it was destroyed and the assault stopped. The boats were moved to a different location and the assault carried over the water obstacle. Supporting machine guns suppressed the defenders fire allowing the pioneers to cross the ditch. This was the beginning of the end for the defenders of Fort IX. 50 prisoners were soon taken and the Germans expanded their bridgehead. Still 500 defenders held out within the fortress. A platoon of 75mm mountain howitzers were brought forward and fired on the fort over open sights. Under this cover, the Germans brought forward some TNT and blasted a hole in the fort allowing the pioneers armed with hand grenades and flame throwers to enter the fort. Despite causing very heavy casualties, the defenders were doomed.

HELL AT KIERNOZIA

Kiernozia Poland, September 16, 1939: During the battle of Bzura, the key transportation hub of Kiernozia was the scene of a hard struggle. The whole 1st Panzer Division participated in the attack. The 1st Panzer and the 35th Panzer Regiment attacked from different direction toward the town. The attack started out well, but after breaking through the Polish lines, the armor and infantry became separated. The Polish infantry cut off the armor and then the Polish AT Guns picked off the tanks one at a time. The decisive moment of battle had come, nearly a dozen German tanks were knocked out and the German and Polish infantry were locked in close and mortal combat. The Germans tried to regroup under fire and renewed the attack with increased ferocity, but the Poles received timely reinforcements and stopped the Germans in their tracks. The Poles continued to surround and isolate the Germans that had penetrated their lines and eventually crushed them. The Germans thereafter referred to this day as Hell at Kiernozia.

HELL AT KIERNOZIA

Kiernozia Poland, September 16, 1939: The battle of Kiernozia took place during the battle of Bzura; during the failed German Panzer counterattack on the Polish forces. The entire 1st Panzer Division was used in the armored assault. The 1st Panzer and the 35th Panzer Regiment were to attack concentrically towards the village of Ruszki. Initially the attack went well, but as the Germans penetrated the Polish lines, the armor became separated from the supporting infantry. The Polish infantry surrounded the lead elements and kept the German infantry from supporting the armor. The Polish AT nests put up strong resistance against the armor. The decisive moment of the battle occurred at this point in front of Kiernozia. The German attack was chaotic and was easily repulsed by the Polish infantry causing heavy casualties to the attackers, knocking out over a dozen of tanks. The Germans tried to regroup and repeated the attack with even more energy, but the Poles had received timely reinforcements and the attack was stopped in its tracks. Within a few hours, the Poles surrounded the dispersed German forces and were decisively crushed. The Germans referred to this day as Hell at Kiernozia.

Wilno, Poland, September 20, 1939: When the first Soviet units crossed the Polish border in the early hours of September 17th, 1939, Poland's fate was sealed. The Polish-Soviet border was split by the Pripet Marshes dividing the invaders into northern and southern groups. The dispersed defenses and the fact that most of the Polish stine troops were confronting the Germans to the west resulted in sporadic and mostly small unit fights between the Poles and the Soviets. The town of Wilno initially provided a focus for the defenders with 10,000 Poles garrisoning the city supplemented by hundreds of volunteers. However, sufficient arms was a problem as only hadlf the defending troops were armed. Therefore, the Polish command ordered the garrison to fail bak into Romania for internment with a small rear guard left to allow the troops to escape. On the 20th, the Soviet 6th Tank Brigade approached the city from the south and was met by elements of the KOP Regiment Wilno. The Poles and the Soviets soon met in spirited and fierce street fighting. A Polish anti-aircraft battery had some success knocking out a number of armored vehicles. But numbers and time soon won out for the Soviets and the Poles were forced out of the city.
