

BUZZ, CHOP, THUNK!

By Warren Lawson

It was probably his idolization of retired star skeleton Barry Bigbones that led a young human lineman to arrange his own death and re-animation to become the latest Blood Bowl chainsaw sensation: Hack Enslash!

First appearing on the pitch in 2501, Hack is obsessed with breaking all his idol's old records. He often talks to his beloved chainsaw, which he has named "Betsy". Rumors abound concerning just how close the two really are, but Hack vehemently denies such allegations: "we sleep in separate caskets!"

Originally a member of the Champions of Death but now a free agent, there seems no lack of teams willing to pay his fee. Recently he was hired to play against the Westside Werewolves in an important play-off match. During the first half, one of the werewolves chewed off Hack's left forearm and proceeded to run around the field with it. Minutes later the wolf swallowed the bones, but Hack retrieved them soon enough (a rare instance of one-armed chainsaw use).

Hack plays every game according to his own agenda. In addition to the standard on-field maiming practices, he often roams the sidelines to take a swipe or two at any opposing players not currently in the match. He is best known, perhaps, for giving spectators in the front row a very "close" view of Betsy. In fact, his most ravenous fans (a sadistic lot that call themselves the Hack Pack) actually jump out of the stands towards him in hopes of being decapitated by their hero. Of course, he never disappoints them!

Even though he has only been playing for a brief time, Hack Enslash already has a solid place in Blood Bowl history. He continues to amass fatalities and has grown into arguably the most popular chainsaw player in the game today.
