aughter of a great Keshani warlord, Chanya spent her childhood in military camps, the tools of war her playthings. Throughout her entire life, she strove to impress her father enough that he might make her a part of his private war-band. This was not to be, as he was betrayed by a treacherous king, and his troop ambushed while they guested in a royal hall. Chanya escaped, a vow of vengeance upon her lips. She since travelled throughout the Black Kingdoms, Darfar, Kush, Stygia, and even Shem, selling her spear to those who would pay its price.

Chanya was sailing up the coast, to make her way to Aquilonia, when her ship was attacked by slavers. She is the last of those captives, and seeks a way to escape. The new slaves look more competent than the prior ones... perhaps now is her chance!

Born in rural, idyllic Brythunia, Ulrike's family were outcastes, driven from the towns for their religious beliefs. While most worshipped Mitra, they hewed to the old ways, the worship of Bori, father of the Hyborian peoples. However, she found the life of a farmer boring beyond comprehension, and fled at an early age, joining a group of bandits and learning their ways. Through circumstances too complicated to describe, she found herself briefly in the court of one of Brythunia's provincial rulers, and left a trail of blood on her way out. She put Brythunia at her back, all the better, for she is wanted there for her crimes.

Unfortunately for Ulrike, a quick trip along the Argossean coast to Shem ended up in her capture and slavery. Fortunately, these were mere slavers, and not the bounty hunters seeking her out. She may have a chance...
