Deep below the surface of the world, in freshwater seas untouched by the sun, dwell the aboleth. Fish the size of whales, with strange growths of gelatinous feelers used to probe the lightless shores. They're served by slaves: blind albino victims of any race unfortunate enough to stumble on them, drained of thought and life by the powers of the aboleth's alien mind. In the depths they plot against each other, fishy cultists building and digging upward towards the surface until someday, they'll breach it. For now, they sleep and dream and guide their pallid minions to do their bidding. Instinct: To command

- Invade a mind
- Turn minions on them
- Put a plan in motion
- (Make adjacent creatures breathe water, not air)

"Few have seen a basilisk and lived to tell the tale. Get it? Seen a basilisk? Little bit of basilisk humor there. Sorry, I know you're looking for something helpful, sirs. Serious stuff, I understand. The basilisk, even without its ability to turn your flesh to stone with a gaze, is a dangerous creature. Bulbous, frog-like eyes and six muscled legs built for leaping. A bit like an alligator, with snapping jaws and sawing teeth. Covered in stony scales and very hard to kill. Best avoided, if possible."

Now you see it, now you don't. Hounds once owned by a sorcerer lord and imbued with a kind of illusory cloak, they escaped into the woods around his lair and began to breed with wolves and wild dogs of the forest. You can spot them, if you're lucky, by the glittering silver of their coats and their strange, ululating howls. They have a remarkable talent for being not quite where they appear to be and use it to take down prey much stronger than themselves. If you find yourself facing a pack of blink dogs you might as well close your eyes and fight. You'll have an easier time when not betrayed by your natural sight. By such sorceries are the natural places of the world polluted with unnatural things.

The behir is a forty foot long abomination you just don't want to bump into. Set at the top of a long snake-like neck, its head feels like the unnatural offspring of a crocodile and a goat. Its body is covered with bluish scales. It has twelve short and sturdy legs on which it runs quickly, swaying like a myriapod. Its powerful tail balances menacingly when it stares at its next dinner. The behir breathes a lightning ray that paralyzes its prey just before it swallows it whole like serpents do. Instinct: To devour

Well-known and categorized, the chimera is a perfected creature. From the codices of the Mage's Guild to the famous pages of Cullaina's Creature Compendium, there's no confusion about what chimera means. Two parts lioness, one part serpent, head of a she-goat, and all the vicious magic one can muster. The actual ritual might vary, as might a detail or two—more creative sorcerers switch the flame breath for acid, perhaps. Used as a guardian, an assassin or merely an instrument of chaos unchained, it matters little. The chimera is the worst sort of abomination: an intentional affront to all natural life. Instinct: To do as commanded

Many have told stories of how the Caves of Chaos breed abominations. The cave fisher has proven them awfully true. You find this pest in deep, dark, filthy underground dungeons. Unsuspecting, you rarely notice the sticky filament attaching to you. Your first awareness is often the pull as it starts to wheel you in. When you glance at it, it just looks like the mad crossing of a lobster with a spider. It has a chitinous armor, eight pairs of legs and two slender pincers. But there is this long snout that fires the strong adhesive filament. Then its pincers dismember a careless adventurer. Instinct: To slice up prey

When titans walked the earth and ate dinosaurs, a froghemoth was already the nastiest encounter possible in a swamp. Today, climate has changed and most swamps aren't large enough to sustain such gigantic monstrosities. Since dinosaurs aren't that widespread nowadays, froghemoths have to turn on smaller beasts and lost groups. They take them by surprise, wreck chaos and havoc and then feed on the dead bodies. Every now and then a young adult has to go out and see the world to find a suitable swamp. Outside their favorite environment they are disoriented and fearful, but no easy prey. Instinct: To feed

There is always need for a good magical beast to besiege castles. So said Muham the Great, First Archmage of the Great Tolmid sultanate. He created the first gorgons out of scrawny cattle that his experiments had turned crazy. Then he unleashed them against the rebel town of Ishtirla. They leveled the great outdoor wall and turned most of the population into stone or bloody carcasses. His work done, he left the gorgons there, thinking they would naturally dwindle. He was wrong. However, what drove them to dark caves and dungeons is unknown. Instinct: To defend its territory

Girallon, they call it—a name from the long-forgotten tongue of the kings who bred the beast. Taller than a building, some say. Cloaked in ivory fur with tusks as long as scimitars. Four arms? Six? The rumors are hard to verify. Every year it is the same: some explorer visits the jungle villages seeking the ape and returns, never quite the same, never with a trophy. But when a gug jumps in the middle of a dungeoneering party, wrecking havoc and disappearing with the tastiest member, these questions seem the least of anyone's worries. Experience shows that rescuing their comrade leads the party into a deadly hunt and the prey isn't necessarily the fleeing gug. Instinct: To eat flesh, fresh and tasty

These creatures have the regal haughtiness of a lion and the arrogant bearing of an eagle, but they temper those with the unshakeable loyalty of both. To earn the friendship of a griffin is to have an ally all your living days.

Truly a gift, that. If you're ever lucky enough to meet one, be respectful and deferential above all else. It may not seem so but they can perceive the subtlest slights and will answer them with a sharp beak and talons. Instinct: To serve allies

Hippogriffs are a mixing of the robust forest horse and the royal eagle. They were the masterwork of the Magister Collegium of Frankstoften. They delivered a beast with good flying abilities while still easy to feed and train. Although not as powerful as griffins, wyverns or pegasi, they proved very efficient in combat because they naturally deployed group tactics. They became wild during the Darkening. Since then they haven't been able to reproduce in captivity. Instinct: To defend the herd

Brain on legs! People laughed the first time that cry was heard. But that was only seconds before the intellect devourer turned them against each other. These monstrosities are definitely stranger than anything else. Many people tend to think they are not of this world. They don't eat food but brains. And the fuller, the tastier. They can shrink to the size of a human brain and replace one in a previously emptied skull. This is their preferred tactic to get close to a really tasty meal. And their favorite attack is to manipulate people or induce madness. Instinct: To eat brains

- Induce madness

He summoned a being of chaos that he perverted to take the shape of the guild throne. When his challenger seated himself he was thrown 10 feet from the coveted chair. The feat became a masterwork, the masterwork a convenience. Mimics are really nasty beasts. They are incredibly patient and they will take even the most trained adventurer by surprise. They have a major flaw, though: strong alcohol or universal solvent releases its sticky bonds. Instinct: Attach to prey

- Reveal its true nature
- Shift shape & form
- Batter a stuck prey
- Parley when outmatched
- Trade with intelligent beings

If the chimera is the first step down a dark path, the manticore is a door that can't be closed once it's been opened. A lion, a scorpion, the wings of a drake. All difficult to obtain but not impossible and just animals, anyway. The last component, the hissing hateful face of the beast, is the ingredient that makes a manticore so cruel. Young or old, man or woman, it matters not but that they are human, living and breathing, married to the creature with twisted magic. All sense of who they are is lost, and maybe that's a blessing, but the beast is born from human suffering. No wonder, then, that they're all so eager to kill. Instinct: To kill

- Poison them
- Rip something apart

Fairest of all the nagas, the Guardian is also the most ruthless when it comes to defend what it was entrusted with. But it is a cautious bastard, trust me, sonny. He will warn you and even allow you a chance to turn back, unharmed. If you don't, it will slide into its trapped lair and chances are you'll see many comrades fall before you find the bastard again.

Then you'll have to fight this cunning bastard and its powerful spells. Whichever evil treasure or master it guards will then be your doom. Better avoid the sucker, sonny!

Instinct: To tirelessly guard

- Send a follower to their death
- Use old magic
- Offer a deal or bargain
- Barter using its mythic knowledge
- Activate a trap in its lair

Among the races of old that have now dwindled, some of the most royal are the nagas. It is not well understood whether the different nagas are highly specialized morphotypes of the same species, or different species. It's enough to say the dark naga doesn't care since it is more occupied with discovering lost magic and spells than socializing with its peers. This endless quest leads them to the same dark places that adventurers roam. It may even ally, temporarily, with them to fulfill one of its goals and betray them as soon as it is convenient. Instinct: To lead

- Send a follower to their death
- Use old magic
- Offer a deal or bargain

Specimen three. The ragged party only brought me the head and a small part of the worm-like body of a Neothelidus regalis. Its brain seems dispersed in many nodules all along the body. However, the head shows a larger nodule with many eccentric bulges. These show strange patterns in the blood vessels and must be each a center for one of their many psychic powers. No less interesting is the gland that secretes their acid breath. Dissect it later. Even stranger is this eye-like structure beside the head nodule. Is this how they trace invisible beings? Instinct: Prepare for an even more ancient evil

- Isolate a powerful enemy
- Call minions
- Read a mind
- See invisible beings
- Breathe acid cone
- Psychic mind crush

Custom Move: When a neothelid crushes your mind, ROLL+CHA. On a 10+, petty psychic! On a 7-9, you choose 1:

- You break down under the pain until it's dead.
- Your mind is turned upside down (change all your relations into negative ones, keep your scores). You flee in panic.

On a 6-, take your Last Breath.

The nagas span the whole spectrum from most noble to the vilest. This is the part of the spirit naga that revels in corruption and evil. This is an enemy not to be underestimated. It will charm the most powerful of a group to turn him on his friends. Then it will cast powerful spells to wreck havoc on the others or lure them into traps. Those adventurers who would attack it in close combat had better be careful of its poisonous bite. The spirit naga is definitely the nastiest of all its kind. Instinct: To feast on rotten meat

- Send a follower to their death
- Use old magic
- Offer a deal or bargain
- Charm with a gaze

Custom Move: When you resist the charm of a spirit naga, ROLL+WIS. On a 10+, just a queer look... On a 7-9, choose 1.

- You're not dazed and confused.
- You can't think straight (no Action with INT). You can't stop staring at those eyes.

On a 6-, only a proper magic will free you from its charm.

The mating call of the otyugh is a horrible, blaring cry that sounds like a cross between an elephant dying and an over-eager vulture. The otyugh spends much of its time partly submerged in filthy water and prefers eating garbage over any other food. As a result, it often grows fat and strong on the offal of orcs, goblins and other cave-dwelling sub-humans. Get too close, however, and you'll have one of its barbed tentacles dragging you into that soggy, razor-toothed maw. If you get away with your life, best get to a doctor, or your victory may be short lived. Instinct: To befoul

- Infect someone with filth fever
- Fling someone or something
- (Grab a foe to eat him alive)

Don't go thinking that every creature not natural-born is a horrible abomination. Don't imagine for a second that they're all tentacles and screaming and blood or whatever. Take this noble beast, for example. Lovely thing, isn't it? A fine white horse with the wings of a swan. Don't look like it ought to be able to fly, but it does. The elves work miracles, in their own way. They breed true—that's the purity of elf-magic at work. Hatching from little crystal eggs and bonded with their riders for life. There's still some beauty in the world, mark my words. Instinct: To carry aloft

- Carry a rider into the air
- Give their rider an advantage

The world is full of dangers and monsters, some of cosmic power. That's why there is the phoenix. This maxim of Ibn'Alledrin summarizes what the phoenix is: A counterbalance that heroes may consult and activate when needed. An incarnation of hope, eternally reborn from its own ashes. They also have great power and they can be counted on to overcome evil in a fight. They yield primal fire and energy with a cunning few wizards do. They never start a fight but they know how to finish it. Instinct: To aid against great evil

- Manipulate fire and energy
- Burn those within 5'
- Read the heart
- Incinerate a whole area
- Be reborn in flames

Custom Move: When you ask a favor of a phoenix when you have an impure heart, ROLL+CHA. On a 10+, it agrees. On a 7-9, choose 1.

- It doesn't ask you for a terrible sacrifice.
- It doesn't send you in a dangerous quest.
- It doesn't tell you never to bother it again.

On a 6-, you'd better run before it catches you!

Evolutionary happenstance has created a clever underground predator. Disguised as a rocky formation—most often a stalactite or stalagmite—the roper waits for its prey to wander by. When it does, whether it's a rat, a goblin or a foolhardy adventurer, a mass of thin, whipping tentacles erupts from the thing's hide. A hundred lashes in the blink of an eye and the stunned prey is being dragged into the roper's mouth. Surprisingly effective for a thing that looks like a rock. Instinct: To ambush

- Ensnare the unsuspecting
- Disarm a foe
- Chew on someone

Remorhasius arcticus, the ice worm. Strangely adapted to its environment. Cold on the outside, burning inside. Burns its way through ice. Very difficult to kill or capture because anything that wounds them either burns or melts, and they are immune to cold or fire magic. It spots prey with its keen eyes or by feeling tremors in the ice. Their inner furnace explains why they are always so desperately hungry. It takes a lot of fuel to nourish such a fire... Instinct: To burn with hunger

- Burst out of cover or burrow away
- Burn anything that wounds them
- Move swiftly and flexibly

When the sea serpent will be finished with yer boat how will ya come back? Ye right, ye'll drown. Stone cold fact. Sea serpents are the best way to test yer sailor's luck. You see one, it's only playful and you escape. Then ye're lucky. If ye're unlucky, it'll attack till yer ship is drowned. Instinct: To play with boats

A very distinctive-looking creature. Something like a reddish cricket, I think. Long crickety legs, anyhow. Blind, too, as I understand it—they feel their way around with those long moth-looking tendrils. Feed that way, too. Sift through piles of metal for the choicest bits. That's what they eat, don't matter the type, neither. Their merest touch turns it all to rusted flakes. Magic lasts longer but under the scrutiny of a rust monster, it's a foregone conclusion. Only the gods know where they came from, but they're a curse if you value your belongings. Instinct: To decay

- Turn metal to rust
- Gain strength from consuming metal

The slime crawler is just the kind of creature you'd expect as a Medusa puppet. It is stealthy, sneaky and paralyzing. Now, they are not really beautiful which is probably why they don't qualify. Most of the time, slime crawlers are solitary, but they may come in a pack. It's particularly true when closer to the nest; proximity is indicated by resin-like encrustations used by slime crawlers to protect their eggs. The most dangerous features of slime crawlers are their paralyzing tentacles and their tendency to attack from unexpected directions. Instinct:

- Attack from an unexpected direction
- Paralyze what's moving
- Climb out of reach
- Grab and bite

Horrible beasts those shocker lizards! When you first spot one, you think dinner is served. When you're done with it, several more have appeared. Then comes the first shock. And more lizards gather. And the shocks hit harder until the first casualty falls. Now, if you are intelligent, that is when you'll retreat. Because, the more you stay the less chance you have. The lizards will appear more quickly than you can kill them. And finally they will shock you down, however tough you are. Follow the advice of an experienced monster hunter and avoid them! Instinct: To attack in packs

The Crystal Mountains are known for sheltering the wild Winter Elves. What is less known is that for generations they would go each year on a long hunt for the strongest wolf of the strongest pack which they did not kill but capture. Then they would keep it for three years among them and weave spells to grow it stronger, stealthier and more aggressive. They would send it back to take the head of the pack and breed stronger wolves. Thus were created the winter wolves, fiercest of all their kind, for the greatest pleasure of the Winter Queen. Instinct: To hunt aggressively
