We don't know who created the first animated objects. Some really old examples can be found in tombs of forgotten civilizations. It appears their use has changed over time. The first animated objects served their master and made his life easier. Then we have the animated battle-ram and catapults created for the fallen Gorlan Empire. They are still in use and they have lost nothing of their accuracy. Modern animated objects are more often designed for security. Their functions are less delicate and their tasks simpler than in old times. Looks like wizards today neglect this art-form. Instinct: To obey orders

- Play its part in a defined scheme
- Burst into animation
- Act upon a pre-set trigger
- Reveal a secret

Among the animals there exists a clear division 'tween hunter and hunted. All it takes is a glance to know—by fangs or glowing eyes or claws or venomous sting—which of the creatures of this world are meant to kill and which stand to be killed. Such a split, if you have the eyes to see it, cuts the world of leaves and flowers in twain, as well. Druids in their forest circles know it. Rangers, too, might spot such a plant before it's too late. Lay folk, though, they wander where they oughtn't—paths into the deep woods covered in creeping vines and with a snap, these hungry ropes snap tight, dragging their meaty prey into the underbrush. Mind your feet, traveller. Instinct: To grow

- Shoot forth new growth
- Attack the unwary
- (Trip them in its thorns)

We all heard about the ape city. This incredible relic of an old ape kingdom, now only visited by dumb apes that mimic their greatness of old. Seldom have we heard of the wrathful apes. Apes perverted by nature into savage cannibalism. Only rumors of the blood thirsty ape tide have reached our ears. Most of us deny these tales to be true. When a nine foot tall silver brutal ape races towards you with deafening screams and spitting a sickening drool, you know these tales are true. Instinct: To attack intruders

- Attack without warning
- Pin a target down
- Rip off another's armor
- Climb out of reach
- Crash down on opponents

It was clear from the start the gods of monsters would not forget bats when time would come to distort animals into monstrous equals. They did a good job on this one, extending their size to a giant form. They perverted their hunting instinct into a lust for blood. And they strengthened their wings to carry larger prey. They do not attack humans directly. But the tribute they take on cattle can be even more disastrous than direct attacks. No wonder goblins manage to turn them into mounts seeing how filthy they both are.

The underground ecology can be quite strange and deceptive. Let's meet the basidirond. At first glance, it looks like a beautiful plant. Its central large flower is richly colored when the basidirond is satiated. Otherwise it dispels grayish hues. Beware of the flower: when it opens, it releases a myriad of invisible spores that are highly hallucinogenic to most mammals and reptiles. Instinct: To feed on rich liquids

- Silently release invisible spores
 - Implant spores into lungs
- Custom Move: When you breathe its spores, ROLL+CON. On a 10+, they are ineffective. On a 7-9, choose 1:
- You take friends for foes.
 - Defy Danger +SAG to avoid running away.

More beautiful by far than any man or woman born in the civil realms... To gaze upon one is to fall in love. Deep and punishing, too. Thing is, they don't love—not the fleshy folk who often find them, anyway. Their love is a primal thing, married to the woods—to a great oak that serves as home and mother and sacred place to them. It's a curse to see one, too, they'll never love you back. No matter what you do. No matter how you pledge yourself to them, they'll always spurn you. If ever their oak comes to harm, you've not only the dryad's wrath to contend with, but in every nearby village there's a score of men with a secret longing in their heart, ready to murder you where you sleep for just a smile from such a creature. Instinct: To love nature passionately

The early days of the settlement were not so easy. While the forest provided many goods, people and cattle disappeared under its leaves. The council sent four strong men with dogs to hunt down whatever was taking them. Less than two hours later, the dogs started to bark furiously. Then the rear man disappeared. When they gazed up, his legs were protruding out of a giant plant. Then a nearby pod engulfed a dog. By the time they destroyed the four pods and cut down the large, strong trunk, there was not much left of the rear guard man. Instinct: To dissolve prey

- Hide in other fauna
- Digest prey with acid
- Engulf prey in a wink
- Attack with unused pods

Custom Move: When you are captured in a flytrap pod, ROLL+STR. On a 10+, you get out rapidly. On a 7-9, you get slightly burnt by acid, choose 1:

- You don't lose your armor or one valuable item.
- You don't get disfigured nor take 1d10 Damage.

Many mythologies tell how gods created their beloved children out of clay, stone or other natural resources. Clay being the most common worldwide. No wonder then that would be gods, I mean wizards, first created golems out of clay. This explains why golems are quite common in ancient tombs. Other harder materials are being preferred nowadays. Clay golems are usually huge, big and with rough features because they represent first essays towards more complicated forms. Like sculptors first design their masterpiece out of clay. Their intelligence is similarly rough which explains their unchanging loyalty to their master.

Instinct: To serve his (long forgotten) master's will

- Put a lost limb into its right place
- Defend itself or its master's properties
- Ignore all but the most powerful spells
- Follow his master's orders
- Be healed by earth magic
- Small chance it goes insane with each attack it makes

Goblins and canis troglodyctis were made for each other. Outcast, repulsive and stinky, vicious and foul, and cowards of course. They share so many attributes. It probably took time for goblins to domesticate canis troglodyctis because the beast saliva and dander are highly allergenic. Though goblins may not differentiate canis troglodyctis allergy with itching from the goblin flea, xenopsylla goblinea. Like the lupus and canis relatives, they live in packs. Their carrion behavior makes them closer to a hyena, though. Goblins domesticate them as guards or mounts. They are a bit less cowardly together than separately. Instinct: To survive

- Hunt using pack tactics
- Track by scent
- Run down prey
- Scatter before a stronger foe
- Isolate a hostage
- Give any nearby filth and germs

Long ago, the Order of the Ice Wizards created one of the largest libraries in the world. In addition to books and artifacts, the library collected body parts from nearly every living monster of the time. To protect their arcane knowledge, the Ice Wizards created the ice golem. According to the legend, they were beautifully crafted into ice statues in the form of the most exotic monsters. Just the opposite to the rough, blunt, and pointy human-like monsters made today. The regeneration from cold is inherited from the wizards' recipe. It testifies the library lies somewhere under the ice. Instinct: To guard or protect

- Regenerate from cold damage
- Freeze damaged body part
- Explode in shrapnel when destroyed
- Attack with killing savagery
- Resume their vigil

Custom Move: When you face the cold breath of an ice golem, ROLL+DEX. On a 10+, you dodge it. On a 7-9, you choose 2:

- You are slowed down until properly warmed up.
- One of your limbs is totally frozen.
- You are frost burnt (b[2d8] damage ignores armor).

On 6-, suffer all three.

This is THE classical golem. Quite easy to create from a plentiful material that comes in varied colors and textures. Always elegant and easy to hide when finely sculpted. Probably the best non-intelligent guard ever built. In recent years, Shandril the Great discovered how to build a stone golem that was made of magma in the inside and boulders on the outside. His most spectacular feature was that it was capable of launching a magma boulder on target with decent accuracy. This started a trend towards fierce looking and more powerful war golems. Instinct: To kill his master's enemies

A staple of the enchanter's art. Every golemist and mechano-thaumaturge in the kingdoms knows this. Iron is a misnomer, though. These guardians are crafted of any metal, really: steel, copper, or even gold, in some small cases. As much an art as a science, the crafting of a fine golem is as respected in the Kingdoms as a bridge newly built or a castle erected in the mountains. Unceasing watchdog, stalwart defender, the iron golem lives to serve, following its orders eternally. Any enchanter worth his salt can craft one, if he can afford the materials. If not... Instinct: To serve

It runs silent and unseen. Well, running is not exactly right. Moving silently would be more appropriate. Unseen is less exact.. Well, you get it. They usually wait for their prey to be very close then lash at intended victims with their pseudopods. The trick is for them to get a firm grip on their prey because they are so easily outrun. Then its all about dissolving a victim, oozing under pants and armor to get in immediate contact with the flesh. It leaves sour burns that need to be taken care of long after escaping this oozing nightmare. Instinct: To dissolve

Spellcasters would like you to think they create a homunculus to serve as spies, messengers, and so on. But the truth is, they need someone to talk to in their lonely mage tower. Otherwise they would turn mad with solitude. However, homunculi do make effective spies or messengers. Their small size, agile flight, and natural stealth help them skulk unnoticed. Homunculi are complex extensions of their creator. That is why there is such a strong link between them. Don't piss off an homunculus if you don't want to mess with his creator. And vice versa. Instinct: To please its master

Some believe gods only live as long as they have followers. But did you know that some even think that gods are only a pixie's prank turned sour? Let me tell you. When elves were young they often lingered in deep forests. There was that pixie who made an elf think she was a goddess of living plants. She "gave" him magical powers—just magical tricks over his shoulder—to subdue other elves into her cult. When there were enough followers, the Mother rose and others began to revere gods in many unusual things. Instinct: To taunt

Decomposers are a very useful part of the natural cycle. They create the soil out of which plants find nutrients. What is less natural is when they actively create the dead bodies over which they feed. And that's exactly what phycomids are: decomposers actively producing their mat of dead bodies.

Two things are quite horrible about them. First, most of their prey escape but not without leaving dissolved organic matter at hand for nearby phycomids. Second, they spread highly toxic reproductive spores that cripple the being they colonize until it dies... and new phycomids emerge out of the remains. Instinct: To decompose

- Infest living beings with spores to reproduce
- Run out of acid after six shots
- Reveal its true nature
- Move on stout legs

Custom Move: When you're infested with Phycomid spores, ROLL+CON. On a 10+, your body destroys the infection. On a 7-9, you're terribly sick and loose one CON everyday until cured or dead (CON=0). On a 6-, you die out of anaphylactic shock. A new Phycomid emerges from your dead body.

Fey are like any other people. There are good ones and bad ones. You'll find the latter in dark woods and foul places that suit their mind better. Among bad fey, the one I like the least is the Quickling. His name tells it all. It is so fast you don't see it coming at your back to stab you with its poisoned blade. In the blink of an eye he disappears again and hides just enough for you to realize what happened. Then it comes back and you feel the bite of his treacherous blade again. Instinct: To inflict pain

- Turn invisible when still
- Cast a cantrip
- Poison with its blades
- Stab the unsuspecting
- Disappear after dealing a blow
- Taunt a nearly defeated victim

While the bloodmage was taking more and more victims out of the streets, strange hooded fey observed him. They noted how the blood gave him more power with each killing. Being fey, which means curious and resourceful, they experimented on animal blood. To some effect, indeed. They went further and tested human blood. To a better effect, indeed. They experimented even further and used innocent children's blood. To a terrible effect indeed, because their gods sentenced them to fill their lives with blasphemy, contempt, hatred and killing. Their redcap holds their power and is the sign of their guilt. Instinct: To shed blood

- Run with a distinctive clatter
- Blindlessly leap into battle
- Recoil before any holy symbol
- Use the blood of his redcap to regenerate or hit harder (+1d6 HP/damage)
- Soak a cap in foe's blood to create a new cap

Who hasn't seen a rat before? It's like that, but nasty and big and not afraid of you anymore. Maybe this one was a cousin to that one you caught in a trap or the one you killed with a knife in that filthy tavern in Darrow. Maybe he's looking for a little ratty revenge. Instinct: To devour

- Swarm
- Rip something (or someone) apart
- (Spread fever by biting)
- (Quickly climb to attack from strange angles)

It is said the Highpeak Kingdom used to trade roc eggs by the hundreds. It lay near a mountain range so full of these gigantic birds it was called the Roc Mounts. The giants destroyed it because they did not appreciate the toll men took on their favorite steed. I heard there is a pass in the Highpeaks that leads to a high inaccessible mountain range where the roc mating grounds are said to be. Should we cross it unspotted we would come back with so many roc feathers we would be immensely rich. Now, do you have what it takes? Instinct: To hunt

- Swoop a prey up
- Let a prey fall from tremendous height
- Protect its hatchlings

I have never failed a mission but one. There was this kid I had to protect. Son to a demon they said but the money was good. We went to this hideout of mine. I had to keep the boy safe until the new moon. But then there was this gigantic spider-like thing, taller than a house. The ground around it was littered with the mercenaries I had hired, not many had time to flee. I must confess I didn't think twice and left the boy behind. I never went to that den again. Instinct: To hunt prey

- Use one of four magical beams (fire, cold, electricity, pertification)
- Locate prey wherever it stands
- Capture its prey in his jaw
- Rampage through to its target

SCARECROW

A living scarecrow? Come on, Maggot, you must have drunk too much last night! You swear not! Ok... And where did you say you found it? In the field near the abandoned tower. And there were lights at the top of the tower? Green, unnatural lights... Don't tell me the scarecrow followed you? No. It what?!? Chase you to the border of the corn field? And then stopped. Come on, Maggot, quiet now. I'm gonna investigate anyways. I am the sheriff, am I not? Maybe we have a new wizard to deal with... Instinct: To scare trespassers

- Strike fear with a touch
- Attack until trespasser leaves
- Focus on one target, instill fear in others

 Treasure d8, +1 strange or magical item

One of only a very few creatures to be found in the old woods that don't outright want to maim, kill, or eat us. They dwell in glades pierced by the sun, and dance on their funny goat-legs to enchanting music played on pipes made of bone and silver. They smile easily and, so long as you please them with jokes and sport, will treat our kind with friendliness. They've a mean streak, though, so if you cross them, make haste elsewhere; very few things hold a grudge like the stubborn satyr. Instinct: To enjoy

- Pull others into revelry through magic
- Force gifts upon them
- Play jokes with illusions and tricks

SHOGGOTH

There are places in this world more insane than the underdark realms of the drow. Places that would drive crazy the foulest sorcerer. Places even the three lich kings avoid and speak of with a burning fear in the eye. They were the realms of a species so old even the dragons don't remember when they fled our world to fight an unheard of war among the stars. They left their servants behind. Incomprehensible things made of jelly with ever appearing and disappearing eyes and mouths. A thing of madness and endless gibberish. Instinct: To attack at first sight

- Move out of idleness
- Relentlessly flow towards its prey
- Surround foes with protoplasm
- Create mouths to eat surrounded prey
- Drive foe mad with its insane whispers

Custom Move: When you meet a Shoggoth, ROLL+WIS. On a 10+, it is simply a disturbing and disgusting thing. On a 7-9, you stay sane but choose 2:

- You flee from the unspeakable horror.
- You lose one WIS.
- You cry until someone helps you come to your senses.

On 6- suffer all 3.

Some elementals are conjured up in sacred circles etched in chalk. Most, in fact. There's a sort of science to it. Others, though, aren't so orderly—they don't fall under the carefully controlled assignments of fire, air, water, or earth. Some are a natural confluence of vine and mire and fungus. They do not think the way a man might think. They cannot be understood as one might understand an elf. They simply are. Spirits of the swamp. Shamblers in the mud. Instinct: To preserve and create swamps

- Call on swamp itself for aid
- Meld into the swamp
- Reassemble into a new form

Nature can be so surprising! Behold the slime mold. I've been told this slime was animated long ago by a dark mage. However, over the centuries, it developed a symbiosis with mushrooms and other lower vegetables. These decomposers give him easily digested nutrients while it provides the basic material. Look how this tiny specimen comes to life when the rat comes closer. See how it engulfs the animal by stretching its fabric. Behold how it oozes into its lungs to smother it. During the next days, you'll note how, and how quickly!, the decaying process takes place. Instinct: To find meat for its symbiots

- Blend in with other fungi
- Instill fungal rot
- Engulf a prey

Custom Move: When you suffer from fungal rot, ROLL+CON. On a 10+, your body is strongest. On a 7-9, Choose 2 until you are cured.

- You smell like rotting meat.
- You are covered with sick black spots.
- You are always tired and listless.

Vegepygmies look like one of Nature's bad jokes. The kind she had while feverish. These small guys seem to be made of interweaving roots. In the pure pygmy tradition, they carry a necklace or a bracelet decorated with bones or teeth, generally coming from the body they emerged from. Similarly their small spears are carved in long bones. Their only goal in life is to protect the russet mold that gave birth to them, and to bring it more prey to feed it and help their little community grow. Instinct: To guard the russet mold patch

- Hide in dark vegetation patches
- Stalk a prey to spot a weakness
- Rush into attack by throwing a spear
- Retreat to an agreed-upon spot
- Expose prey to russet mold spores

Custom Move: When you are exposed to russet mold spores, ROLL+CON. On a 10+, the spores don't take roots. On a 7-9, choose one:

- You don't throw up your last meal.
- You aren't foul-smelling for days.
- You don't grow fungus tendrils on your body.

On a 6-, you lose one CON everyday until cured or dead (CON=0). 1d6 Vegepygmies emerge from your body.

When the Titan Wars raged on, men were not the dominant species they are now. The weak species was washed here and there by the tides of war. Then the God of Beasts approached some men and he proposed an alliance. He would make them stronger and fiercer. In exchange, they would form his army, an army of dire beasts. He needed beasts to conquer all kinds of environments. So he gave some men the power and qualities of the badger to chase down enemies in caves and deep catacombs. Instinct: To feel genuinely civilized

- Transform to pass unnoticed as beast or man
- Hunt like man and beast

One of the most unexpected events of the Titan Wars was the coming of the fairies. Thus was it easy for them to get control of the soft temperate forests of the more civilized realms. At first, the God of Beasts did not care much because fairies showed respect to wildlife. But then the fairies began to restrict admittance to their parts only to the fair and feeble species. The God didn't like that at all. And he transformed the wild men of the woods who had concerns against the fairies into the unstoppable wereboars. Instinct: To feel genuinely civilized

The God of Beasts gave some men the power of dire animals to wage his war. But men wouldn't lose their fair appearance and they would not throw away their other gifts. They made the deal with the God by getting the possibility to transform back to their human form. So were born the true lycanthropes. The dark forests of the north were a key in the strategy of the God. So he gave the power of the bear to the savage tribes of the forests. No lycanthrope is tougher or kinder (if approached benevolently) than the werebear. Instinct: To feel genuinely civilized

We saw it coming and thought it was just another lost traveler stumbling with weariness. Then we realized it was a zombie. My first blow killed it outright. We left the corpse to the raven. And this yellow musk began to grow, quickly. That's when the zombie infestation began in the village. They were not violent, just aimless. Later, another night I saw her walking by the musk. I saw the pollen puff and then tendrills groping for her head turning her into a zombie. She was the eighth zombie. Instinct: To make slaves

- Call zombies to his defense
- Aim a pollen spray at a target
- Drain brain of charmed foe to create a new zombie
- Send oldest zombie away to form new creeper
- Regenerate unless its roots are destroyed

Custom Move: When you inhale yellow musk pollen, ROLL+WIS. On a 10+, you keep control. On a 7-9, choose 1:

- You're not dizzy for hours.
- You don't have to Defy danger vs. WIS to attack the musk.
- You don't take your friends for musk zombies.

On a 6-, you're under the yellow musk charm.
