Background

The infernal pact he made in his youth continues to feature prominently in Gardrin's life. He is constantly worried that his clan will judge him for the act of desperation that led to the pact. Even though he managed to save many lives, he is certain that he has brought shame and dishonor to his ancestors by his actions. Over time he has come to feel bitter about his situation, blaming everyone but himself for the actions he felt he was forced to take during that fateful night. A few years ago, in a rare moment of insight, he realized where his thoughts were headed and decided to leave the clanhold before he manages to convince himself that it was the fault of his clan for failing him.

He met Loraen while studying ritual magic in a temple of Corellon. The eladrin was somehow able to discern the true source of Gardrin's power, but remarkably did not treat him any different. Loraen told him that the source of the magic is not what is important, but rather the purposes one puts it too. Seeing a chance of redemption, he has decided to accompany the eladrin in his travels, hoping to grow into more wisdom. Even now though, he wonders if Loraen suspects that he sometimes contemplates using his powers for selfish ends or that he finds joy in wielding the arcane power coursing through his body.

Traits: Acquisitive, Corruptible, Secretive.

Distinguishing Characteristics: He tends to tug his ear when he feels trouble is about to happen. He is often absentminded, but perks up at the mention of magic that might be acquired. Gardrin finds it difficult to take responsibility for his failures or mistakes.
