How to Make UniGames Cardboard Stand-ups

1. Print out. 2. Color with pencils or watercolors.

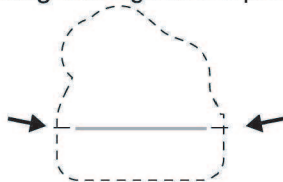

3. Glue to thin cardboard (such as cardstock or a Ritz cracker box).

4. Cut out dotted outlines.

Cut these two black lines.

5. Turn the piece over and use a ruler and ballpoint pen to draw a line between these cuts. This makes a MUCH nicer fold, preventing damage to the printing.

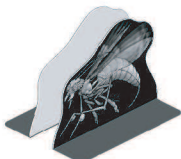

6. Cut inwards to black outline. Go clockwise if you are left-handed and counter-clockwise if you are right-handed.

7. Fold black base flaps outwards.

8. Glue two halves together. (For maximum durability, I use Elmer's Pro-Bond. White glue tends to warp.)

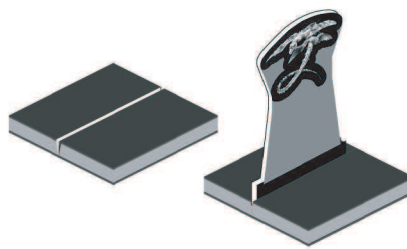

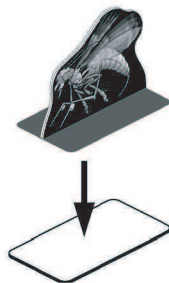

9. Glue to the base pieces.

10. OPTIONAL:

Take black paint or marker and darken the edges.

Coat with Reaper Miniatures' Sealant

TIP: For flatter storage, use these in bases made of foam core.

Cut squares and slit carefully with a X-acto knife. Cover the edges with carpenter's glue or white glue or acrylic paint. Insert for use; take out and store in a plastic bag.

Cut the miniatures out across the base at the two thinner lines.

If you like, you can construct your minis with hexagonal bases by cutting along the white lines provided.

New to foam core?
Check out "Foam Core Crafts for Beginners", the little instruction book by Talzhemir, available as a .PDF from <http://rpgnow.com!>

The white circle indicates the front of the figure. It is also useful for pencilling in a number to tell the figures apart. If you don't want them, use a black marker or a spot of paint to cover them.

A Hero's Chlén-hide Blade...

There are countless designs for a blade. Each detail lends its own peculiar fighting properties.

For instance, the curved tip on this one is less likely to get caught on something when used in a slashing arc. The hooks on the underside can pull a shield away from the opponent's body, opening them up for a thrust, or making them vulnerable to another's weapon.

The tip is in line with the wielder's knuckles, a configuration known as a "drop point". This adds more penetrating power. The curved handle allows the palm to add more force, as well.

While less likely to be used to attack, the two points on the trailing edge of the blade are protection against making contact at the exact point where a powerful blow is most apt to shatter it.

Even the holes have a function. Venting ablates the force of an impact. If the shock went in further it might cause cracks.

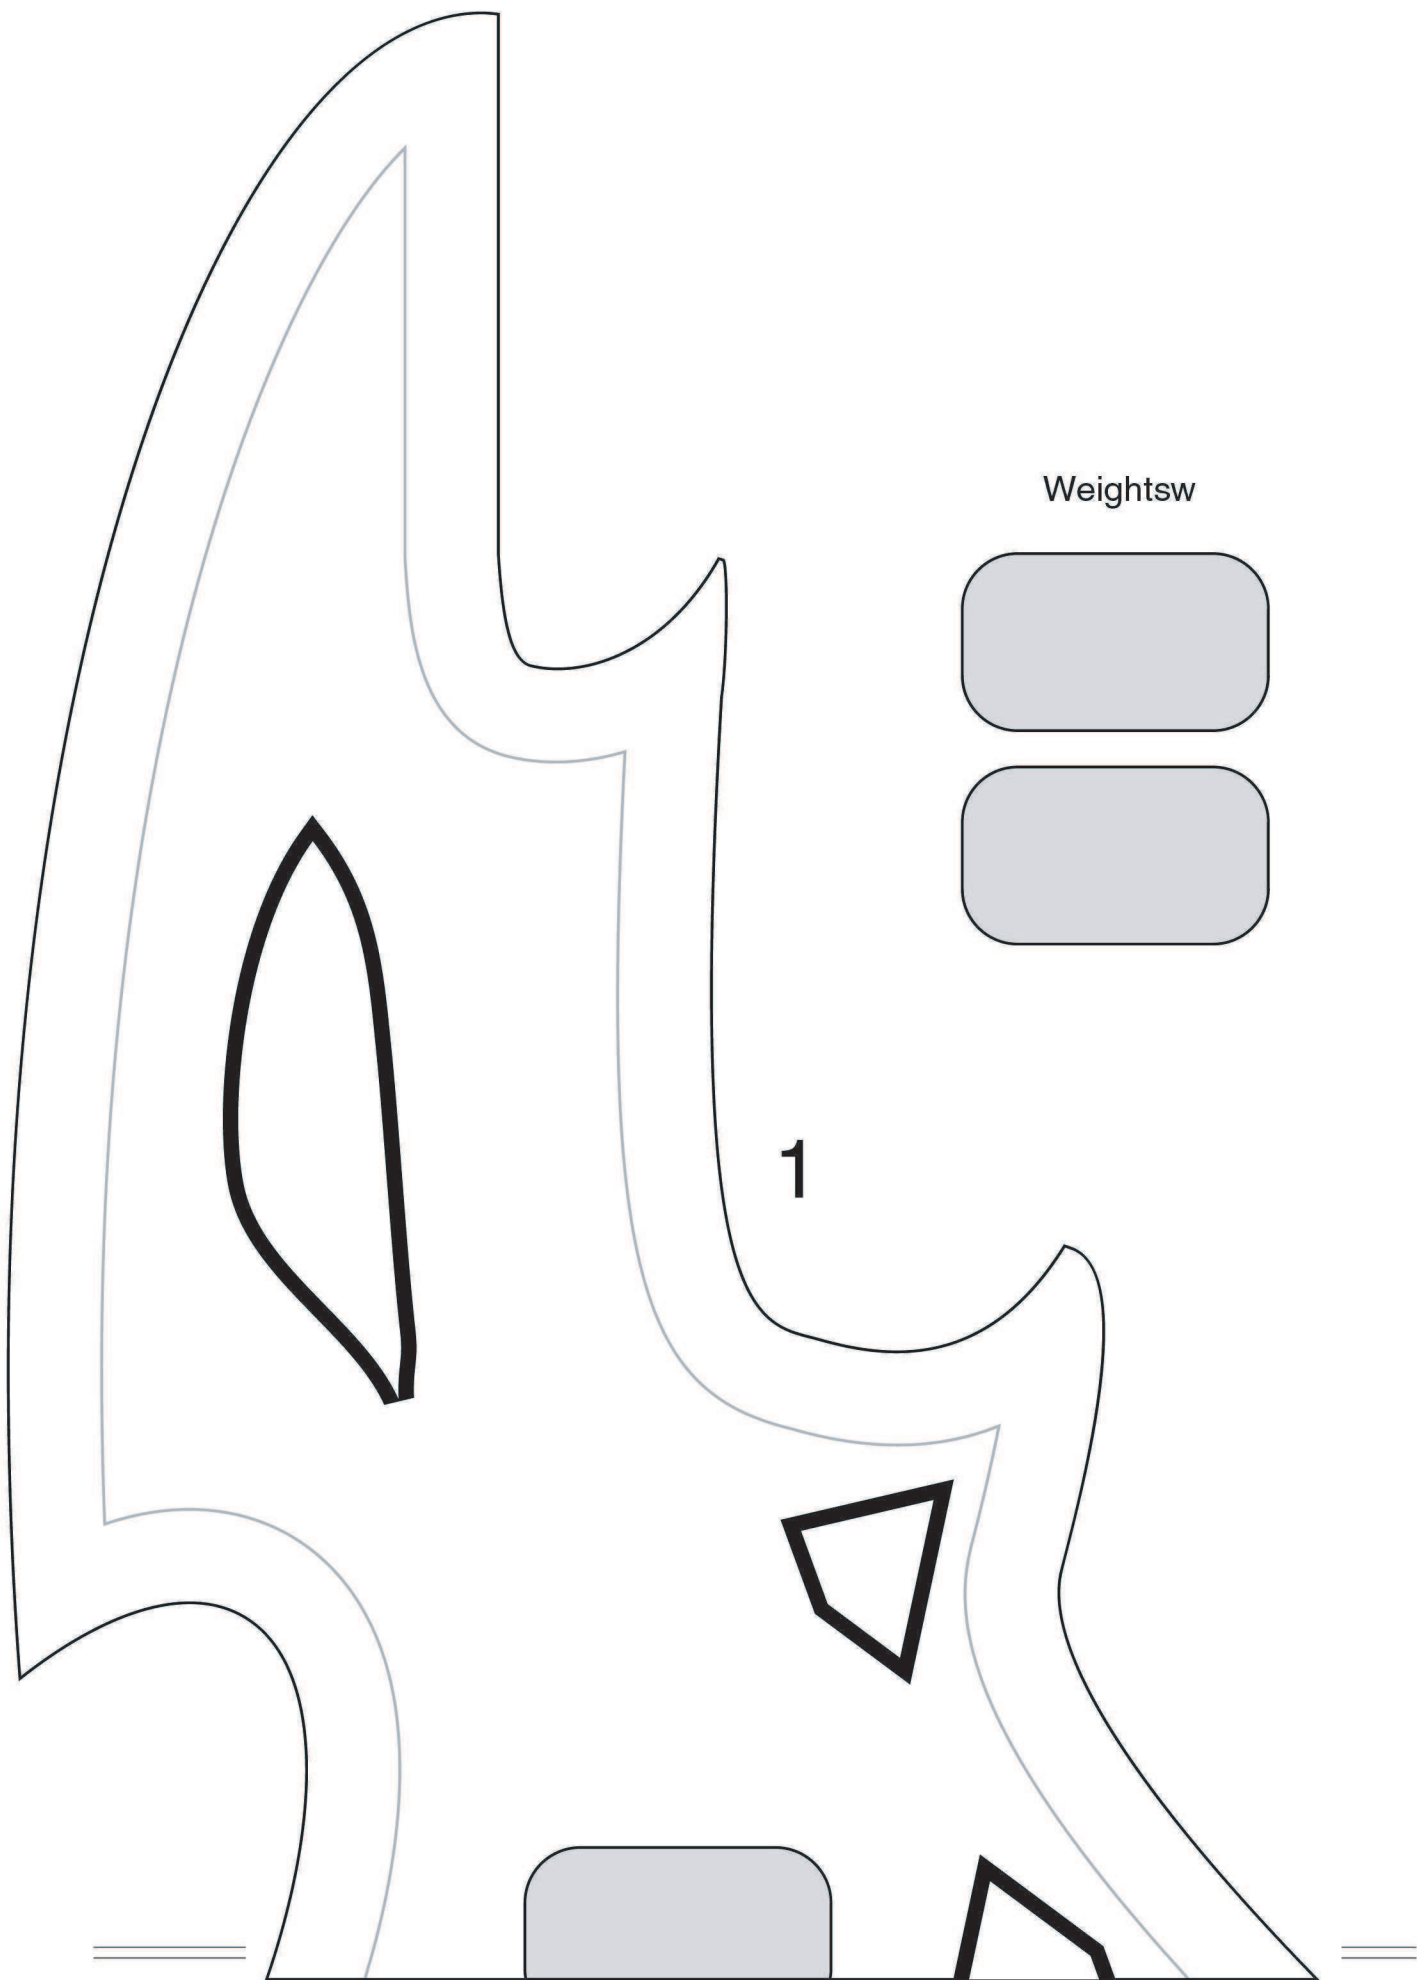

Not every swordsmith knows every detail of what we call "structural engineering" and "material stresses" today. Many weapons are made as meticulous replicas of traditional designs, knowing mainly that what they have, works.

Antiques are especially respected. After all, only a good sword gets to be an old sword.

Make your own cosplay Tèkumelyáni sword!

Use a long ruler and pencil to draw a grid on a piece of foam core or plywood. Reproduce the design (or make your own, of course), and cut out with X-acto knife or jigsaw. (This one is intended for a follower of Karakán, hence the hawk head.)
