A Note to 2006 Readers

This article from Griffin magazine perfectly illustrates the infamous "new class fever" of the late 70s. One of the oddest things about new classes is that they were almost invariably shot down in flames by infuriated or sarcastic readers in the Letters page – yet magazines such as Griffin and Labyrinth kept on publishing dozens of them, as if their editors were driven by some mysterious compulsion...

Here is a short selection of excerpts from the Letters page that followed Warriors Galore :

"New class ??? Come on ! The Archer is just a male Amazon !"

"How could a cavalryman ever venture into an underground maze, I ask you ?"

"The Duellist is a walking anachronism (...) as well as an insult to the supremacy of Spearmen !"

"And then you have the Pankrator. Aside from its utterly silly name, he is another superb example of a completely useless class..."

"I thought Nobles were the real Warlords !!!"

"What's next ??? Samuraïs ? Musketeers ? Boomerang Masters ?"

"Please don't do stuff like this anymore."

"How can you publish such rubbish when you reject outstanding contributions like the fourteen new classes I sent you last October ? I'm sure many Griffin readers would be more than curious to read about the Maze Builder, the Bounty Hunter or the Mountain Brigand !"
