The Tsolyáni Language Primer

by Curtis Scott

Dedication

To M. A. R. Barker: for giving us a jewel more precious than the Petal Throne itself: Tekumel.

Acknowledgements: I would like to thank Professor Barker for all of the help he gave me on this work. I would also like to thank (in alphabetical order) Elizabeth Ewing, Joan Lamare, Anthony Petit, Stephen Posey, Steven Schwartz and Donald Sivori for their helpful suggestions. Finally, I would like to thank my wife, Mary, for her patience with me while I wrote this book.

Preface

In my experience, very few people read the preface of books. Therefore, to those reading this passage, welcome!

The Tsolyáni Language Primer is a short introductory course in the Tsolyáni language, which is spoken by the inhabitants of the Empire of Tsolyánu on Tékumel. For those who have never experienced Tékumel, suffice it to say that it is a world as filled with culture, drama, and interest as any in fiction (or possibly in non-fiction). Professor M.A.R. Barker's Empire of the Petal Throne and Swords and Glory games have introduced many people to the creatures, peoples, and lands of Tékumel while providing hours of enjoyable adventures. Yet, like a jewel, Tékumel shows more and more facets with every glimpse and fascinates all who deal with it.

One of the less commonly known publications about Tékumel, The Tsolyáni Language (Professor Barker, 1973), describes the language which is covered in this book. This work, however, was essentially designed for the formal linguist, and provided little or no help to the untrained student. Some people have managed to learn the language through perseverance, and to those people I say "báu!" ("Bravo!"), for they are better men (or women) than I. Professor Barker helped me in my studies of the language, and his patience and aid were invaluable to both my own knowledge and this volume.

The Tsolyáni Language Primer does not replace Professor Barker's work, but rather supplements it, as a stepping stone for those whose interest in Tékumel leads them to become more and more immersed in its intricacies.

How To Use This Book

- 1) Read all the Tsolyáni sentences aloud! You will never learn to pronounce the Tsolyáni language if you read silently or mumble. If you are embarrassed, find a small room off to the side where nobody will hear you and sing out!
- 2) Perform all of the exercises. Otherwise, you will find yourself referring back to the previous lessons for things you should already have learned. If this happens, you did not learn the earlier lessons thoroughly enough, and a review may (make that, will) be in order.

- 3) Make up sentences on your own. As you learn more of the language, you will be able to express more complex concepts. If you have friends who are also learning the language, write letters to one another, since even a simple note might teach your friend something he had not realised about the language.
- 4) Set aside some time each week and do one lesson. Don't try to learn the entire language in one sitting. Spend the intervening week thinking about what you have learned.
- 5) Above all, try! Don't give up because you "don't feel like it right now." Decide to learn the language and DO IT!

Pronunciation

The Tsolyáni language is written using a phonemic script called “vísumikh hikólumel” (“the servant of the Emperor”), used throughout the Imperium and its protectorates. However, this script is difficult to master for English-speaking students and, therefore, in this work the phonemic alphabet designed by Professor Barker and published in The Tsolyáni Language (op. cit.) is used. For those individuals who may not have the latter work, the author has provided a simplified pronunciation guide, with the technical linguistic pronunciation terms removed.

The phonemes of Tsolyáni are broken into two parts: consonants and vowels. The consonants are pronounced :

p	as in “pin” or “pond”
b	as in “ball” or “boy”
m	as in “my” or “mail”
f	as in “fish” or “find”
v	as in “vine” or “vapour”
w	as in “wine” or “walk”
t	as in “table” or “talk”
d	as in “dog” or “duck”
n	as in “not” or “nail”
th	as in “thigh” or “thank”
dh	as in “thy” or “this”
ch	as in “church” or “change”
j	as in “judge” or “job”
y	as in “yes” or “yellow”
k	as in “king” or “key”
g	as in “gun” or “gold”
kh	“ch” in German “Achtung!”, or the Scottish “loch” This sound is sometime written “x” by linguists.
gh	as Arabic “ghayn”, a sort of trilled “g”
q	as Arabic “q”, a “k” spoken further back in the throat
h	as “hat” or “hold”
ng	as “sing” or “strong”
!	the “-” in “uh-oh”, or the “tt” of the Cockney “Bottle” (“Bo!le”) ts	as “hats” or “fits”
tl	as a stereotypical Charlie Chan accent saying “tr” in “tree” (“tlee”)
s	as in “sing” or “salad”
sh	as in “shell” or “ship”
z	as in “zoo” or “zipper”
zh	as “z” in “azure” or “J” in “Jaques”
ss	as Sanskrit “s”
r	as Spanish “pero”
l	as “leg” or “lost”
hl	as “ll” in Welsh “Llewellyn”

The vowels of the language are pronounced as follows :

i	as “machine” (American long e)
a	as “ father ”
u	as “ flute ” or “ crude ” (American long u)
o	as “ note ” or “ float ” (American long o)
ü	as German “ Führer ”
e	similar to “ face ” or “ gate ”, without the y-like offglide (i.e., not “fayce” or “gayte”)
au	as “ou” of “ out ”
ai	as “i” in “ nice ” (American long i)
oi	as “oy” of “ boy ”

There are also several consonant pairs that have their own specific pronounciations. These are :

tr	as “ tree ” or “ truck ”
mr	as “m” sound followed by an “r” sound, but spoken as one consonant
dl	a “voiced” tl, a “d” sound followed by an “l” sound

In addition, a doubled consonant is simply held for longer than a single consonant, but they are pronounced with the same sound. Any consonant may be doubled except “s”, as “ss” is a different sound.

Occasionally, a hyphen (“-”) is used to separate parts of a word. This hyphen is a grammatical convenience and is not pronounced. It is sometimes used to separate roots from their affixes and also to separate certain consonantal pairs (such as “k-h”) when two consonants are intended, as opposed to a single consonant with a two letter representation (such as “kh”).

Syllable division in Tsolyáni is performed by a very simple rule. A syllable always begins with a consonant (or consonant pair) followed by one or two vowels. Optionally, there can also be a consonant following the vowel(s), but this will only be part of the syllable if there is another consonant to begin the next syllable or this consonant is the last letter in the word. (Words which begin with a vowel have an implied glottal stop (“!”) which is not written.) For example, the word “korúnkoi” (“book”) is divided into syllables as “ko-rún-koi”, and the word “Butrús” (the name of a city) is divided “Bu-trús” (consonant pairs are not separated).

The accent marks (“‘” and “’”) placd over the vowels in syllables denote primary and secondary stresses of syllables in the word. They do not change the pronunciation of the vowel. For example: the word “correct” would be stressed “corréct” (“cor-RECT”) by most speakers of the English language.

Syllables in Tsolyáni are all pronounced with the same length, regardless of stress. Unstressed vowels are clearly pronounced, and not slurred into “uh”s as in English.

This pronunciation guide is accurate as far as it goes. Those readers with some linguistic training should see The Tsolyáni Language (op. cit.) for the formal specification of the pronunciation of these phonemes.

Lesson 1 - parshélin sijakkánikh

másun zhúr guál?
What is this?

su!úrikh pen	korúnkoi book	hruchánmekh paper	shantsúrikh box	vayúnlukh key
-----------------	------------------	----------------------	--------------------	------------------

másun su!úrikh guál, né?
Is this a pen?

ssá, másun su!úrikh guál.
Yes, this is a pen.

másun shantsúrikh guál, né?
Is this a box?

ssá, másun shantsúrikh guál.
Yes, this is a box.

máisur korúnkoi guál, né?
Is this a book?

yá, másun korúnkoi yá guál, vál su!úrikh.
No, this is not a book, but a pen.

NOTE

Several important facts about the previous sentences should be pointed out:

- 1) The general form of these sentences (called “copula” sentences) is :

Subject + Object + Verb

thus : “This is a pen.” is written “This (a) pen is.”

- 2) “másun” and “máisur” are both forms of the English word “this”. “másun” is used with ignoble nouns and “máisur” is used with noble nouns (see page 2). When asking a question, like “What is this?”, “másun” is generally used unless the object is of obviously noble origin. The plural forms (“that”) are “mssúran” (plural ignoble) and “mssúri” (plural noble).
- 3) There are no articles (a, an, the) in Tsolyáni. Thus, “másun su!úrikh guál.” may mean “This is a pen.” or “This is the pen.”
- 4) The present tense of a Tsolyáni verb such as “guál” (“to be”) is always simply the verb stem standing alone for all cases and genders.
- 5) When asking a question in Tsolyáni, the order of the words in the sentence does not change from that of a statement. However, if no interrogative words (such as “zhúr”) are present in a “yes-or-no” question, the word “né” is added at the end. Its rough translation is “Isn’t that so?”.

NOTE

Nouns in Tsolyáni are divisible into three groups : (a) noble, (b) ignoble, and (c) unclassifiable. This division is basic to the language, and is the only form of gender. This classification applies to singular nouns only, all plurals (noble, ignoble, or unclassified) are treated alike. There are suffixes to denote which nouns belong to which class (discussed below). These suffixes will not appear in certain circumstances, but you will learn about these later.

The noble class includes noun stems denoting males, high-status terms, ranks, clan names, Imperial buildings and works, predominantly male or noble pursuits, and other concepts which possess positive status value. Nouns of this class are marked with the suffix “-koi.” Of the nouns we have covered so far, only “korúnkoi” (“book”) is of this class.

The ignoble class includes noun stems denoting “non-noble” beings and objects, including most females (yes, the language is chauvinistic!), children, animals, inanimate things, abstractions, low-caste occupations, etc. Nouns of this class, are marked with the suffix “-ikh.” after noun stems ending with a consonant, and “-kh.” after noun stems ending in a vowel. Note that the hyphen is not written except in the case where the noun stem ends in “i”, in which case the hyphen remains. (This is so we can remove the suffix easily when it does not appear (see above).) Thus, for example, the noun stem “máni” (meaning food) is written with its suffix as “máni-kh” not “mánikh”. All of the nouns we have learned so far (except “korúnkoi”) are of this class.

The “unclassifiable” nouns are either too noble or too ignoble to require the defining suffix. Proper names are also included in this class. These nouns have no suffix.

The plural form of any noun is denoted by the suffix “-yal.” Thus, “korúnyal” means “books” and shantsúryal” means “boxes”.

Your current picture of the form of a noun should now be :

NOUN STEM + Noble/Ignoble/Plural Suffix

This picture will become more complex as your studies continue.

lán good				másun kula!árin guál! It is done!
ngángmuru! Greetings!				brumazík! Goodbye! (lit. “in peace”)

NOTE

“ngángmuru” and “brumazík” are used with social equals. Other greetings are used with nobles and other social superiors, as well as social inferiors.

“ngángmuru brujutlé” (lit. “greetings in humility”) is used when greeting a social superior. “ngángmuru bruháya lél brumazík” (lit. “greetings in glory and in peace”) is used when greeting a noble person. “Ohé!” (lit. “Hey!”) is used when meeting a social inferior.

“brujutlé” (lit. “in humility”) is used to say goodbye to a social superior. When speaking to a nobleman, one should use “túsmidálímra bruháya” (lit. “in your noble glory”). Social inferiors are dismissed with “pazángli!” (lit. “Stay!”).

Exercises

Write the following English sentences in Tsolyáni by following the pattern of the examples.

másun su!úrikh guál, né?

másun hruchánmekh guál.

Is this a pen?

Is this a box?

Is this a key?

Is this paper?

Is this a roof?

Are these pictures?

Are these chairs?

Are these windows?

This is paper.

This is a book.

This is a roof.

This is a door.

This is a wall.

This is a pen.

This is a floor.

This is a lamp.

This is a table.

These are books.

These are pens.

These are lamps.

másun su!úrikh yá guál, vál shantsúrikh. This is not a pen but a box.

This is not a chair but a table.

This is not a window but paper.

This is not a book but a lamp.

This is not a floor but a wall.

This is not a roof but a key.

These are not doors but pictures.

This is the green key.

másun zháurun su!úrikh guál.
This is the green pen.

másun zháurun korúnkoi guál.
This is the green book.

NOTE

To specify a particular item such as “this pen”, simply add the demonstrative prefix “másun-” (singular) or “mssúran-” (plural) to the noun. Thus, for example, “másunsu!úrikh” means “this pen” and “mssúransu!úrikh” means “these pens”.

To specify “that pen” (referring to something that is a moderate distance away), the prefix “másunònul-” (for “that”) or “mssúranònul” (for “those”) is used. For objects a long distance away, “másunjàga-” (for “that”) or “mssúranjàga-” for “those”) is used.

Thus, the current picture of a noun is :

Demonstrative + NOUN + Noble/Ignoble/Plural Suffix
Prefix STEM

másunvayúnlukh kárin guál.

mikárun shantsúrikh ní-n guál.
The black box is short.

Note on ní-n

The word “ní-n” (“small”) also means “narrow”, “short”, etc. It is used in place of all of these English words, and its exact meaning is implied by context. In addition, “ksíbi-n” (“long”) also means “tall” and “high”.

párvün náulakh ní-n guál, né?
Is the yellow dress short?

párvün náulakh ra ní-n ra ksíbi-n guál?
Is the yellow dress short or long?

chángilin su!úrikh ksíbi-n guál, ra míkárugh ra kárikh?
Which pen is long, the black one or the red one?

NOTE

The expression “the black one” is an example of referring to an object by an adjective describing the object. This is done in Tsolyáni by using the adjective in place of the noun, but using the noun ending (“-ikh”, “-kh” or “-koi”) instead of the adjectival ending (“-in” or “-n”). Thus, for example, to say “the black one” about an ignoble object, one would say “mikárukh”, whereas if one were speaking of a noble object, one would say “mikárukoi”. This general principle holds for all adjectives. Thus, “ksíbikoi” means “the long (noble object)”.

NOTE

The words for “I” and “you” (singular) in Tsolyáni depend upon the status of the person being spoken about. Thus, there are five common ways to say “I” :

lín	lowest class, very ignoble
lú	low class
lúm	middle class
lukán	upper class
salúm	noble class
kosalúm	emperor or empress only

The following passages from Professor Barker’s The Tsolyáni Language (op. cit.) explains the use of these far more clearly than the author could :

“Correct use of these pronouns implies a clear recognition of one’s place in Tsolyáni society. This is almost always easy since visible insignia of rank, clan, wealth, and social position abound. Slaves, peasant women and children and certain very low classes of free men (e.g. latrine sweepers) employ “lín”. Higher categories of slaves, male peasants, labourers, and others use “lú”. The most common for is “lúm”, since this is appropriate for middle class Tsolyáni such as merchants, soldiers, priests, officials of minor status, craftsmen, wealthier peasants, etc. “lukán” is employed by wealthier persons: clan-chiefs, senior merchants, upper-rank priests, military officers, minor nobility, etc. “salúm” is used by high priests, great nobles, generals, hereditary heads of important clans, Imperial bureaucrats of the upper echelons, members of the Imperial family, etc. The pronoun “kosalúm” can be employed only by the emperor or empress; misuse is a punishable offence.

“A person may wish to honour (or flatter) a listener of equal or superior rank by choosing a pronoun lower than that which is appropriate for him. For example, in a group of people where “lúm” is proper for all, one speaker may elect to use “lú” for himself to show himself as humble. Similarly, a middle class person may select “lú” instead of “lúm” when addressing a minor noble. Persons for whom “lúm” or even “lukán” would be proper may refer to themselves as “lú” or even “lín” when in conversation with a high noble like a prince of the empire. All persons, without exception, employ “lín” when addressing the Imperial presence in Avanthár. It may be noted that the converse of this practice is not found; a speaker never uses a pronoun higher than his status permits in order to aggrandise himself; this would simply demonstrate his stupidity and inability to recognise his proper social place. A speaker who is entitled to “lúm” therefore never uses “lukán”, unless his status in the society is increased to the appropriate rank. Foreigners entering Tsolyánu should use “lúm” in dealing with most people but should be prepared to employ “lú” or “lín” when confronted with persons of the upper or noble classes.

“A woman speaking to women employs the same system that men do. When speaking of herself in the presence of male equals, however, she employs a pronoun one rank lower than that appropriate to her status. A middle class woman thus uses “lúm” for “I” when conversing with females and inferior males, but when she speaks before men of her own class (i.e. males who use “lúm”), she refers to herself as “lú”. When a high noble lady speaks to high noble males, she uses “lukán” or even “lúm”. There are two exceptions to this : (1) an Aridáni woman (i.e. a woman who has legally declared herself independant of clan and family strictures and assumed equal status with males) uses the same pronouns as males do, and (2) an empress always uses “kosalúm”.

“Certain Eastern dialects, such as those around Thráya and Jaikalór, have further forms for “I”. Under the influence of Salarvyáni, perhaps, these dialects have developed two complete series : male-noble versus female-ignoble. The male-noble series is the same as that given above. The female-ignoble set consists of : “lín” (equivalent to both “lín” and “lú” in the male set); “lén” (equivalent to “lúm”); “lutlén” (equivalent to “lukán”); and “salutlén” (equivalent to “salúm”). “kosalúm” remains the same. The same cultural considerations apply as in the west : e.g. a woman who uses “lén” to her female equals and male inferiors uses “lín” before males of her own social class; an upper class lady who uses “lutlén” to her female equals and to her male inferiors employs “lén” before males of her own rank etc.”

There are also four ways to say “you” (singular) in common usage :

tsám	low class
túsmi	middle class
túsmidàli	high class
mìsrítusmidali	noble class

Again, perhaps Professor Barker’s discussion of the subject would be most enlightening :

“A person of the lower social orders (i.e. one who uses “lín” or “lú” for “I”) addresses an equal, male or female, as “tsám”. He calls his superiors “túsmi”, “túsmidàli” or “mìsrítusmidali” according to their status. A man of the middle class speaks to inferiors as “tsám”, to equals as “túsmi”, and to those of higher status as “túsmidàli” or “mìsrítusmidali” as they require. Persons of the upper and noble classes follow similar patterns. Men and women both use the same status-pronouns for the same type of addresses e.g. a lady of middle status calls her social equals “túsmi” just as her husband does.

“There is also the added dimension of familiarity. In the privacy of the bedchamber even a high noble addresses his wife as “tsám”, and she may respond in kind. Amongst intimate family members and retainers he may call her “túsmi”, instead of “mìsrítusmidali”, and she may reply with “túsmi” or “túsmidali” in return. Close friends of both sexes often address one another as “tsám” or “túsmi” irrespective of rank. The beginner must be cautious in applying this principle, and it is proper to ask whether the other person minds being treated as a familiar or not. Note also that while practice may be applied to equals and inferiors, one cannot use it with superiors.

Many other honorific and subtly connotated second person pronouns are employed. These are covered in The Tsolyáni Language (op. cit. pp.17-18).

NOTE

Prepositions and other indicators of “case” in Tsolyáni are designated by locative prefixes attached to the object of the preposition. Some of the more common prefixes of this class are :

hi-	of
mik-	from
tham-	by, with, using
pag-	with, accompanying
chalu-	for, on behalf of
bru-	in
som-	upon, on, above
san-	down upon, down to

dhi-	behind
che-	before, prior to
tu-	after
ken-	up to, until
jil-	about, concerning
ngis-	in exchange for
bek-	in addition to
kar-	in place of

When these prefixes occur, the Noble/Ignoble Suffix does not appear, unless the noun is plural.
Thus, your current picture of a noun should be :

Demonstrative Prefix + Locative Prefix + Noun Stem + Noble/Ignoble/Plural Suffix

NOTE

Unlike the copula sentences in the previous lessons, the sentences in this lesson are structured :

Subject + (Adverb) + Verb + Direct Object

They are called transitive sentences. The direct object in these sentences is marked with the locative prefix “tla-”.

This kind of sentence also includes another new concept, the pronomial direct object, which is the third person pronoun (“másur”, “másun”, “mssúri”, “mssúran”) used with direct objects. This pronoun must agree in nobility/ignobility and number with the direct object itself. For example, “vusijáktokoi gathám másur, tlakorún” literally translates as “The teacher takes it, the book.” This pronoun is required with all direct objects which are not in themselves pronouns. For example, “vusijáktokoi gathám tlamásun” means “The teacher takes it”. Because “másun” is a pronoun on its own, this sentence does not require a pronomial direct object. (“vusijáktokoi gathám másun, tlamásun” is incorrect.)

You have been introduced to four new transitive verbs already. These are :

gathám	to take
kardén	to put
vayún	to open
dhalúr	to close

vusijáktokoi gathám másun, tlasu!úr.

Take the book, Kagésh!	Take the pen!

somralél kardénli másur, tlakorún, Kagésh.
Put the book on the table, Kagésh.

NOTE

The suffix “-li” on a verb stem denotes the imperative form of the verb. This form is used when a command is given, and the subject is an implied “you”. There are three forms of imperative, depending upon whom is being spoken to:

To say “Take it!” to a

slave :	gathám tlamásun!
person of low to middle class :	gathámlí tlamásun!
to a person of ligh class :	gathámlitùsmi tlamásun!

Using the wrong form can be insulting, especially if a lower class form is used with a higher class person. If further emphasis is desired, the proper form of the second person pronoun (“you”) may be used (for example: “túsni gathámlí tlamásun”).

Your current picture of a verb should now be :

VERB STEM + Imperative Suffix

vayúnli másun, tlatsón.
Open the door.

dhalúrli másun, tlatsón.
Close the door.

ní-n zhuráun brushantsúr kardénli másun, ksíbi-n níri-n tlasu!úr.

The teacher goes to the door.

vusijáktokoi mollodhúl múle, né?
Does the teacher go to the window?

yá, másur mollodhúl yá múle.
No, he does not go to the window.

NOTE

The verb “múle” (to go) is an intransitive verb. Sentences containing intransitive verbs have a general form similar to the copulative sentences of previous lessons, as the verb appears at the end of the sentence. These sentences also do not have a direct object.

These sentences have a formal structure of :

Subject + (Adverb) + Verb

This word order is fairly fixed throughout the language, although other word orders do occur (mainly in historical and religious texts).

másur fénul múle?

Playésha molJakálla múle dópal, né?
Is Playésha going to Jakálla?

yá, másun molJakálla yá múle dópal, vál molAvanthár.
No, she is not going to Jakálla, but to Avathár.

NOTE

The word “dópal” is an indicator of the “is ...ing” (ongoing action) form of the verb. Thus, “lúm moltús mi pál” means “I come to you”, and “lúm moltús mi pál dópal” means “I am coming to you”. The same applies to all verbs.

“dópal” is an example of the aspective, a verbal modifier placed immediately after the verb it modifies. Aspectives describe the manner in which an action occurs, as opposed to the tense of the verb. In English, these aspectives are usually represented as verbs with the action modified being the object of the verb. Only one aspective may appear with any given verb at any one time. Some examples of aspective are :

bárü	denotes habitual action. The subject is usually a person or an animate object since inanimate objects and abstract nouns may only metaphorically have habits. Example : “máisur molsijakkán hági-n múle bárü” means “He daily goes to school (going there is his regular habit)”.
niyás	indicates an action which the speaker thinks is probable. When another aspective is used with a verb, the adverb “nitólin” (“probably”) is used. Examples : “lúm múle niyás” means “I probably go” and “lúm nitólin múle lanmrála” means “I probably have to go.”
tetén	denotes an action which is repeated intermittently, frequently, or continually with pauses between the repetitions. Example, “másun molsijakkán múle tetén” means “He goes to school intermittently.”
hu!ú	“to manage to ...”. This form denotes being able to complete an action by striving. This form is not common in spoken Tsolyáni, although it does appear in written form. Example : “lúm yá múle hu!ú” means “I cannot manage to go.”
káris	“to be about to ...”, “on the point of ...”. This aspective indicates that the actor is just about to perform the action. Example : “lúm múle káris” means “I am about to go”. Note that this is not a tense per se, as forms such as “He will be about to go” are possible.
lanmrála	“to have to ...”, “must ...”. This aspective shows compulsion on the part of the actor to perform the action. Example : “lúm múle lanmrála” means “I must go.”

tlayésh	expresses an action which can be performed : “to be able to ...”, “can...”. Note that “to be unable” can be shown by negating a sentence with “tlayésh”. Example : “lúm molsijakkán múle tlayésh” means “I can go to school.”
worél	indicates that the action is being attempted; “to try to ...”. Example : “lúm molsijakkán múle worél” means “I try to go to school.”
otún	denotes an action which is beginning : “to start to ...”, “to begin to ...”. Example : “lúm vayún otún maísur, tlakórún” means “I begin to open the book.”
tané	signifies the ending or completion of an action : “to finish ...ing”, “to stop ...ing.” Example : “lúm vayún tané másur, tlakorún” means “I finish opening the book.”
táino	expresses a state resulting from an action, as distinguished from performing the action itself. For example, in English, “I am sitting” means “I am in the act of sitting” or “I have already completed the act of sitting and am in the state of sitting.” There is no simple way that this distinction is made in English. For example, consider the difference between “He will be sleeping” and “He will be falling asleep” or “They will catch her” and “They will be holding her.”

one chair two chairs three chairs

NOTE

When referring to a number of “things” the numbers can be used as prefixes (as above) with the adjectival formant suffix (“-n” or “-in”) removed. These suffixes are added to the ends of numerals when they stand alone. The numerals can be used as separate adjectives for emphasis, if desired. Thus, “gàkorúnyal” and “gán korúnyal” both mean “two books”, but the second has more emphasis on the “two”.

When the numerical adjectives are used as prefixes to a noun, they are part of the class of prefixes known as quantifiers. Other members of this class include :

qùru-	all
hlòn-	any
hlònìl-	very
bùru-	many, much
tài-	a few
zhà-	some
lüm-	too few, not enough
kàu-	too many, too much
yàlu-	none, no

These prefixes follow the demonstrative prefixes and precede the locative prefixes, this “mmsurànbìbrukorúnyal” means “in these three books”. Thus your current concept of a noun should be :

Demonstrative + Quantifier + Locative + NOUN + (Ig)Noble/Plural
Prefix Prefix Prefix STEM + Suffix

NOTE

Plural first and second person pronouns differ from their equivalent singular forms (see Lesson 5). For example, there are two forms of the first person plural pronoun (“we”). The form used depends on whether the person spoken to is included in the group being spoken about :

we (inclusive)	lúmi
we (exclusive)	lúmama

These forms are used regardless of the class of the speaker and his party. As Ti!únme hiChakotlékka says in his treatise “Atlésudhàliyal hiDaritsánsadhàli hiKolumébabàr” (The Beauteous Pronouns of the Powerful and Elegant Language of the Imperium) :

“In the singular, a man may see himself and know his own rank and status relative to others. In the plural, however, men may join together and act, and they may be of various ranks and classes. Shall we then have one pronoun for a group of five men of the middle classes and one of noble rank, versus another for four men of the former and two of the latter? To permit diversification would make speech impossible!”

Canto XXXVII, verses 94 - 98
Translation by M. A. R. Barker

In the second person (“you”), there are three forms of the plural pronoun. The pronoun to be used depends upon the class of the people spoken about :

tlúmi	low class
tlúmiyel	middle class
túsmidali	high class
mìsrítúsmidáli	noble class

Note that the high class and noble class forms of “you” (plural) are the same as the corresponding forms of “you” (singular). For example : “túsmidali pál dópal” means either “You (high class, singular) are going” or “You (high class, plural) are going”.

NOTE

As you have probably gathered from the preceding examples, the suffix “-mra” is used as the possession indicator, very similar to the English suffix “-’s”.

This type of suffix is totally new to our concept of the noun. We shall therefore add it, thusly :

Demons. + Quantifier + Locative + NOUN + Possessive + (Ig)Noble/Plural
Prefix + Prefix + Prefix + STEM + Suffix + Suffix

Lesson 11 - prùtlén sijákkanikh

molsijákkan múle dópal Going to school

lúm molsijákkan múle dópal
I am going to school.

lúm molsijákkan mál guál múle.
I will go to school.

lúm molsijákkan zhúlin mál úl guál múle.
I will go to school tomorrow.

túsmi molsijákkan hági-n mályal úl guál múle bárü.
You will go to school daily.

NOTE

The phrase “mál úl guál” indicates the future tense of the verb (“will ...”). It is used with all verbs. When the action will be repeated more than once in the future, the form “mályal úl guál” is used.

lúm molsijákkan zhúlin mál úl guál tlatsír.
I will run to school tomorrow.

lúm molsijákkan zhúlin mál úl guál múle.
I will walk to school tomorrow.

NOTE

As you probably noticed (at least I hope you noticed), the sentence for “I will walk to school” in Tsolyáni is the same as the sentence for “I will go to school.” The verb “múle” means both “walk” and “go”. This is because there are no riding animals in Tsolyánu and the only forms of vehicle are the litter (very expensive) or the Chlén-cart (very slow). Thus, the assumed mode of travel is walking.

lúm molsijákkan zhúlin mál úl guál múle.
I will go to school tomorrow.

lúm molsijákkan zhúlin mál úl múle.
Let me go to school tomorrow.

NOTE

The “Let me ...” or “Let us ...” tense of a verb is called the hortative tenses of the verb. This form is indicated in Tsolyáni by preceding the verb with the phrase “mál úl”. This is different from the future tense (“mál úl guál”), which could be translated as “Let it be that ...”

lúmi brusijákkan siják kaidün lél súrim dópal.
We are learning to read and write in school.

lúmi mál úl guál siják súrim mssúran, lúmimra tlakhatúnyal.
We will learn to write our names.

NOTE

The verb “siják” (“to learn”) is the root for a number of other words which we have already learned. This allows us to illustrate a few new formative affixes.

The first of these words is “sijáktokoi” (“student”). This verb illustrates the suffix “-to” which may be appended to any verb and means “the person who performs the action as a profession”. Thus, “sijáktokoi” means “a professional learner”. (The noble suffix “-koi” is appended because learning is considered a noble profession. If an ignoble profession were being considered, the ignoble suffix (“-ikh” or “-kh”) would be used.)

The second, “vusijáktokoi” (“teacher”) illustrates the verbal prefix “vu-”. This prefix means “to cause to ...”, thus “vusiják” means “to cause to learn” or “to teach”, and “vusijáktokoi” means “a person who teaches (causes to learn) as a profession” or “a teacher”.

The third word, “sijákkanikh” illustrates the “-kan” suffix. This suffix, like “-to”, converts the verb it is appended to into a noun, but the meaning of the noun is “the place where the action is performed”. This, “sijákkanikh” means “the place where learning is done” or “school”.

Given these three suffixes, try to figure out how the following words were created:

kaidükanikh	reading-room
súrimtokoi	scribe
súrimkanikh	writing-room
vayúntokh	gate-guard, doorman

lúm súrim másun, lúmmra tlakhatún.
I write my name.

lúm súrim dópal másun, lúmmra tlakhatún.
I am writing my name.

lúm mál úl guál súrim másun, lúmmra tlakhatún.
I will write my name.

súrimli másun, túsmimra tlakhatún.
Write your name.

lúm kaidün dópal másun, tlakashkéru hiHrúggadàlisa.
I am reading the Epic of Great and Might Hrúggga.

NOTE

If you analyse the word, “hiHrúggadàlisa” in the previous sentence, you will probably notice that the portion “-dálisa” is unfamiliar to you. This is made up of two suffixes “-dàli” and “-sa”. These suffixes are called general attitude suffixes. There are several of these in the language, including :

-dàli	big, large (from dáli-n, “big”, “large” in Lesson 4)
-sa	powerful, mighty
-dhàli	beautiful, pretty
-ga	hated
-ni	small
-nikèl	ever-living
-la	good, excellent
-ra	contemptible, despicable or female

The suffix “-ra” deserves more discussion. For example, “sijáktokoi” (“teacher”) becomes “sijáktorakoi” (“female teacher” or “despicable teacher”). The difference in meanings can only be determined by context.

The suffixes may be repeated for emphasis. This “básrimsakoi” means “the powerful man”, and “básrimsasakoi” means “the very powerful man”. In addition, more than one of these suffixes may be used in a given noun phrase, such as “básrimdàlisakoi” (“the great and powerful man”). Thus, our new picture of the noun phrase is as follows :

Kagésh básrimdàlikoi guál.
Kagésh is a large man.

Weaponer : Eleven, and I will give you the sword-clip for nothing.

Chargésh : shráithukh!
Chargésh : Agreed!
(lit. “Agreement!”)

NOTES

Several comments may be made on the preceding dialogue :

- 1) The word “chegúkh” literally means “kindness”. However, idiomatically it means “Please”, “Thank you”, and “May I help you?”.
- 2) The suffix “-lu” when appended to a verb means “the object with which the action is performed”. For example, “purdállukh” is made up of the verb “purdál” (“to fight”) and the suffix “-lu” (with an ignoble suffix added on for form). Can you now figure out how “vayúnlukh” was derived?
- 3) The suffix “-gáshu” when added to a noun means “seller of (object)”. For example, “purdállugàshukh” means “seller of weapons”, and “korúnggáshukh” means “seller of books”. (Note that when this suffix is appended to a word ending in “n”, the sound is not “n” + “g”, but “ng” + “g”).
- 4) The suffix “-gashén” when added to a noun stem indicates “place where the object is sold.” For example, “purdállugashènikh” means “weaponshop” and “korúnggashènikh” means “bookshop”. (As above, when this suffix is appended to a word ending in “n”, the sound is “ng” + “g”).
- 5) The following new nouns were introduced :

ssyúkoi	sword
haudárikh	bazaar
héssi-kh	family
sarelquékh	sword-clip
shráithukh	agreement

- 6) The following new verbs were introduced :

NOTE

There are two forms on the verb “to hit” in Tsolyáni. One (“dímlal”) is used when the “subject” hits the “direct object” directly (with his hand, a melee weapon, etc.). The (“járshü”) is used when the “subject” uses a missile to hit the “direct object”.

NOTES

The preceding dialogue includes some new words and forms :

- 1) In case you had not noticed, Lord Kagésh used the “upper class” (“lukán”) form of the first person pronoun (“I”), and was in turn called “túsmidàli” (upper class second person pronoun) by the priest (see lessons 5 and 10). This is an example of a conversation in which the class distinction between upper and middle class is evident. It is very important that the proper forms be used to avoid insulting the individual to whom you are speaking. If any question arises, guess “high” (towards upper class) when speaking of others, and “low” (towards lower class) when speaking of yourself. This will usually be mistaken for politeness, instead of ignorance or insult.

- 2) The following new verbs were introduced :

hesdóm	to speak with, converse
káta	to sacrifice
galá	to pray
tlúr	to pay
vuchanyél (from: chanyél)	to revivify to live)
kardétha	to leave, abandon

- 3) The following new nouns were introduced :

gadaleshánikh	religion
púrdhikh	fruit
kasrárikh	altar
shadákikh	price
góprukoi	friend
mítlanyal	gods
tlomítlanyal	Lords of Stability
tlokìriqáluyal	Lords of Change
tikákoi	lord, master, ruler, overlord
jérikh	light
thiálakh	maiden (noble if referring to a god)
dhalishánikh	beauty
qadárdàlikoi	war
pengatsánikh	knowledge
chálikh	corpse, dead man
chusúkh	darkness
hlatsálkoi	flame (noble - Sacred Flame)
riyúlikh	worm
throzékh	sin

All the new words listed above follow the rules we have learned for words of their type. Thus, “lúm káta dópal” means “I am sacrificing”, and so on. No irregular words appear in these lists. In fact, the Tsolyáni language has very few irregular words at all! So don’t worry about all of this new vocabulary. Special notes will indicate any irregularities.

Kasulü : I am tired. Let's go home.

NOTES

The previous dialogue contains a number of new language elements that need discussion :

- 1) A number of words in the dialogue were derived from the root word “púrdal” (“to fight”). These words are :

hespúrdal	to fight one another
púrdalikh	fight
púrdalmokoi	gladiator

- 2) The prefix “hes-” on a verb denotes the reciprocalative form of the verb. This form means “action upon one another”. Thus, “hespúrdal” means “to fight one another” and “hesdímlal” means “to hit one another”.
- 3) The word “muní” signifies an event which took place just once in the past or on just one occasion. For example, “lúm múle muní” means “I went (once).”

- 4) The word “nizál” denotes an action which has recently ceased (“just ...ed”). For example : “lúm múle nizál muní” means “I just went”. It is not precisely a past tense, as one can use it in such forms as “másur mál úl dimlálmizál tlamáisur.” meaning “He will have just struck him.”

- 5) The interrogative “marázal” means “when?” or “what time?”.

- 6) Some new verbs were used in the dialogue. These were :

burdáng	to bet	hitlésh	to win
tlúr	to pay	zhágu	to fall

7) Some new nouns were also used in the dialogue. These were :

shüvünlukh	ticket	kuidürikh	peddler
ngálukh	wine	burdángikh	bet
véshukh	home

8) Some new adjectives were used in the dialogue :

tùpehágín	at noon	fadílin	hot
aijómin		thirsty	missúmin
chawánin	tired		killed

NOTES

- 1) The following new nouns were introduced ;

thékukh	trip	pagmókh	sight
khotókh	gate	sákbekh	Sákbe-road
páslekh	side	gaimátsukh	avenue
náumakh	bridge	héngganikh	splendour
lúyanikh	quarter	fatlérikh	foreigner
münikoi	palace	fatlánikh	foreign land
hitláshikh	victory	kólumel	emperor
jaithulénkoi	governer	nraggashénikh	slave-market
nrágakh	slave	mashíqikh	east
dhúminekh	tomb
juthmáyal	crowd (always plural)

- 2) The following new verbs were introduced :

théku	to travel	varkúng	to pass
hináng	to reach	dhúfan	to sell
qadlán	to turn	nokáim	to please (from “káim” - “to like”)

- 3) The following new adjectives were introduced :

qámi-n	today	gashén	both
kenqól	a while

- 4) The suffixes “-ü” (for verbs ending in consonants) and “-ngü” (for verbs ending in vowels) translate as “having ...ed”, i.e. An action performed by the subject of the sentence, but performed before the main verb. In English, this is idiomatically expressed by two verbs connected by “and”; i.e. “He goes home and sleeps.” Native speakers of Tsolyáni consider connecting two verbs by “lél” inelegant and prefer : “Having gone home, he sleeps.”

- 5) The suffixes “-ai” (for verbs ending in consonants) and “-dai” (for verbs ending in vowels) translate as “while ...ing”. This form denotes an action performed by the subject or the object of the main sentence, but performed simultaneously with the main verb. For example : “seyúdai, másun móle dópal” means “Laughing, she is walking along”. (“seyú” means “to laugh”), and “máisur pagál tlatshám, dímlalai másun, tlhumédh” means “He sees you hitting the woman.”

- 6) The verbal prefix “no-” transforms a basically intransitive verb stem into a transitive one. For example : “notsokó” (“to seat”) is transitive as opposed to “tsokó” (“to sit”), and “nokáim” (“to please”) is transitive as opposed to “káim” (“to like”).

Exercises

túsmimra mrishánkoi,
Chugrin

The English translation of this letter is as follows :

Beloved Daughter,

I have heard that you have arrived and you are not harmed. I hope the trip did not tire you.

I have hidden this letter in some common documents, therefore I do not believe the Copper Tomb Society will be able to track it. Most of the glass, jewellery and other things have already been sold (for a cheap price, unfortunately). The clan-elder has a letter of credit.

I, because of the possibility of discovery (lit. “finding”), must decrease your living allowances (lit. “your money for the price of living”). The clanhouse in Jakkála will give you 1000 Káitars each month. This should support you.

I hear you will be studying with Kolgák hiKolmárik of the temple of Ksárul. He was my teacher many years ago. He probably does not remember me, therefore speak about me to him.

Your father,
Chugrín

NOTES

- 1) Did you have trouble with this lesson? If you had more trouble than usual, then you have been depending too much on the English translations beneath each sentence. Practice your Tsolyáni without the English translations for a while to improve your proficiency.
- 2) The following new nouns have been introduced :

fáshdri-kh	letter
ngésakh	daughter
surtlékh	paper, document
sóngmukh	society
dhúminekh	tomb
míssikh	copper
sóngmukh hidhúmine himíss	-- Copper Tomb Society
su!í-kh	glass
dütélikh	jewellery (piece)
dlántükoi	clan-elder
hatsnélukh	letter of credit
tsáipakh	discovery (fr : “tsaípa” “to find”)
fa!arkánikh	clanhouse

gatlérugh	month
chenalünikh	year

- 3) The following new verbs have been introduced :

lyútha	to hear, listen
nráidhu	to hope
nochawán	to cause to tire
nodishén	to hide (something)
from : dishén	to hide (yourself)
timán	to believe, obey, understand
hmün	to track (prey)
pálmü	to decrease
warán	to keep, maintain, support
hráis	to remember

- 4) The following new adjectives have been introduced :

shórunin	common	brásin	other
záiman	cheap	gayún	unfortunately

- 5) Notice that the father uses “salúm” (noble clan) for himself, and “túsni” for his daughter. This is true for two reasons.

First, the daughter is female, and females use a pronoun one level lower than that of their class (see lessons 5 and 10). This circumstance applies to females both when they are referring to themselves and when males refer to them.

Secondly, the father is claiming the respect due to him as an elderly individual in the clan as well as this girl’s father. Respect for one’s elders is as much a part of Tsolyáni culture as it is of ours.

- 6) This lesson completes our studies. As a reward for persevering this far, there are no exercises for this lesson. You now have a sound base in Tsolyáni language elements. Extend your studies through The Tsolyani Language (op. cit.) You have scratched the surface of a beautiful culture, and have achieved a level of proficiency you can be proud of.
