Macewan Diary Page (Chapter 3)

Peter confronted me outside the trade house today, and in front of the children no less! I wanted to tell him to hold his tongue lest our plan be undone and our plot discovered! But all I could do was sputter like a fool for fear of raising suspicions, all the while hoping beyond hope that he would not reveal our secrets to the entire village. Luckily, he managed to hold from the brink of ruin, but for how long?

I hoped after our campaigning together that I could trust him in our endeavor to get the ring, but the things we saw merely brought back worse memories for him. I remember well how he could not handle the horrors of combat, especially when magic and unnatural creatures were involved. He seems ill at ease these days, and was clearly drunk, swearing and cursing in front of the children as he did. I told the older children to steer clear of his property until all of this settles down.

Note at Pete's Shack (Chapter 3)

How dare you threaten my land? After all I've done for this community. Your greed, your greed, your wickedness. While you are suffering everlasting torment, you and your family shall know the hell of torment to take what is rightfully mine!

Jon Macewan's Campaign Journal, Part I (Chapter 3)

The eyes of milady's foreign wizard lit with glee when she discovered the bottle jutting as it was from the sand not far from the oasis. We had encamped not far from our quarry city, a walled Numedan privateer fortress that had thus far withstood all of our best plans.

The weasel-faced sorcerer spoke quickly to milady in a tongue that I have not yet mastered. She smiled and nodded to him and replied in his own tongue as she patted the strange vizier on his back like one would pet their prized hunting dog. She drew off to the edge of the camp, near the waving fronds of the oasis. I followed, and I know not why. Something about the odd glimmer of the bottle compelled me. Fear for the safety of my liege drove me to be sure she would not spend more time than necessary with the desert jackal dressed in the skin of a man, cursed be the day he made her confidence! There at the edge of the oasis did I see her draw her sword and strike the stopper.

Suddenly a smoke of green and purple, red and orange, poured from the end of the brass flask, and I saw the most damnable vision I had ever seen. A demon no doubt, called an efreeti by local lore, rose above my mistress with eyes like a pair of gleaming hot coals and red skin licked with living fire. It grinned at her and demanded her name as I trembled awestruck and in fear.

My lady did not raise her voice but beckoned the being to crouch and listen as she commanded of it three wishes in return for the gift of freedom. I know not what she asked, for I fled the scene in terror.

When next I saw our lady, she looked easily ten years younger. She returned to the generals of the army that very morning and held closed counsel with them. By the afternoon, we had taken the city and plundered its treasures in the name of our gods. The following morning, a great tower of brass, whose minaret burned like a torch, stood over the city, and we withdrew upon the ships of the harbor, set to return at last to our homeland.

For my part in the campaign, I was granted this fine farmstead, and I do my best to forget the strange happenings in that horrid desert land.

Macewan's Journal, Part 2 (Chapter 3)

Old Rest has always been a peculiar, haunted place. Sometimes it seemingly has a life of its own that I think was unleashed from beneath the soil. This is likely why our folk returned to burying their kin on our farms rather than in that ancient graveyard. Once, Grendle and Aelish came home after playing hide-and-seek among the tombstones with a handful of charnel coins. I have since forbidden the children from playing anywhere near the mound, as there is no reason the children should have come into possession of the eyes of the dead.

It was a good thing I did! The halfling Fritz from Bard's Gate stopped by the farm on his way to explore the place for some chronology he was writing for the Sanctum of the Scroll in Bard's Gate. He seemed confident that any tales of danger at Old Rest were nothing more than wives' tales. No one has seen the fellow in over a week. We went looking for him, but were turned away by a number of...

Macewan's Journal, Part 3 (Chapter 3)

They are hunting for something. I think I know what it is, and if my suspicions are correct, I can use the information to my advantage. I should tell Peter the blacksmith and have him come with me to investigate.

Sadly, my suspicions are confirmed. I do not think the seekers suspected the thing to still exist. After what we saw in the mound, I fear that poor Pete will never be the same again. Gods help us if they find it. I gave it to the forester Kent to take to Andrigor in Bard's Gate. If he does not, it is no matter. At the least the ring will be out of their hands.
