

THE BOOK OF IMPERIAL NAMES

This document aims to provide gamemasters with a number of ways to enhance their Warhammer Fantasy Roleplay campaigns. By using the tables, it is possible to generate a wide variety of names for NPCs, businesses, parts of town, and many other things in the Empire. Add detail to NPCs and businesses with tables to determine their line of work and level of Craftsmanship (see Old World Armoury, p. 92), and any material goods their vocation involves. While these lists do not cover every possible trade good in the Old World, they should be used as springboards for ideas to include in your game.

MATERIALS AND SERVICES

Many careers involve a material good of some kind. Let's look at the commodity of wood to illustrate just how many careers may come into contact with this material good.

Woodsmen perform the hard work of cutting down trees. Log-floaters may then take felled timber and send it downriver to a sawmill. The logs may be cut into smaller sections and loaded onto carts by local labourers, and then transported by cart drivers who often hire armed guards to protect against thieves and beasts of the wild. At a sawmill, the logs are cut into planks by sawyers. Stacked lumber may be bought wholesale by merchants or other purchasers, and then transported again to their lumber yards or warehouses. The merchant (sometimes through an intermediary) sells the lumber to any interested buyers at retail prices. Those buyers may be boatbuilders, carpenters, fence-makers, and so on. Through their efforts the lumber is turned into boats, houses and walls. And of course, Imperial tax collectors will pay everyone a visit to take their percentage of the trade, assuming the business is licit to begin with.

Some careers are concerned with providing an immaterial service. Scholars for instance need study and lecture and little else, trading perhaps in crusty books and knowledge only. Such characters are likely to be independently wealthy to afford such leisurely pursuits! Other examples include horse groomers, who provide no product other than a shiny horse's coat, and the common barber who does not actually buy or sell anything aside from a few minutes' work with a pair of clippers... unless there is some enterprising Halfling in one's village who collects the leavings to include in their special pies.

And so goes commerce in the Old World.

GENERATING BUSINESSES AND VOCATIONS

To determine the nature of a business or character's vocation, roll on the Line of Work Table. The result should narrow down the kind of work being done, and should suggest ways that it might deal in a material good, be they caramels or coffins. To determine what the material, roll on the Goods Table. The range and success of a business can be determined by a roll on the Business Craftsmanship Table. Note that rolling on each of these tables to generate a random result may generate unusual businesses. It may be best to choose one or two elements of the business and dice for the others, and reject any results that contradict.

BUSINESS CRAFTSMANSHIP

D100	Craftsmanship	Description
01-10	Varies	Enterprising individual. Examples: One-legged widow selling rat pies out of her pockets. An heiress.
11-70	Poor	Local; home business; minimal staff; serves a single neighborhood or small village; struggles to turn a profit if ever. Examples: A farmer and son baking clay pots when the harvest is poor, in order to have something to barter with at the market. A bakery in a town full of bakeries.
71-85	Average	May conduct business with nearby villages; moderately successful; only a handful of competitors; premier business in the neighborhood or village; several members of staff. Examples: The only blacksmith in a village. A vintner with a good reputation in a town with few wine makers.
86-95	Good	Dozens or possibly hundreds of staff; may conduct business throughout its home province; often tied with Imperial demands; premier business or trade for a town; successful business with few competitors. Examples: Altdorf-Talabec passenger boat. The busiest restaurant in Nuln. The Ostland Excise.
96-100	Best	May be transnational or conduct business throughout the Empire; may be a personal, public or secret enterprise but may have state backing or purpose; possibly thousands of staff; premier business or trade of a city or nation; very successful. Examples: The silk trade from Cathay. The Imperial navy.

TWO-STEP SURNAMES

This method involves rolling for a prefix and one or more suffixes. A name (or part of a name) can be diced for or chosen, although for best results a bit of both methods should be applied. Roll D1000 on the Surname Prefix and Surname Suffix tables. Some names may have more than one suffix, and others may be fine without any.

STREET NAMES

Using street names and addresses in adventures is one way to instill a sense of reality in WFRP campaigns. Preparing for an adventure in a city should involve some street-naming, and this document is designed to help GMs create names suitable for the Empire.

Many of the terms on this list can be used as they are, especially for the roads and pathways of smaller settlements. In towns and cities where there may be more than one circular street or alleyway, it is necessary to label them to avoid confusion. In those cases, a prefix is usually added to the street type to distinguish it from others. This practice eventually leads to a whole network of named streets.

For a street's prefix, any randomly generated Imperial forename or surname should work fine. (Examples: Klatschstrasse or Sigmarsfarhbahn.) Any German word for a vocation should also be perfect for creating street names. (Example: Furrmanns Weg, meaning Teamsters Alley.) The Settlements of Sigmar tables on p. 49 of Liber Fanatica III contain many words that can be applied to streets. It is common practice to name at least one street after the town itself. (Example: Delb Weg in Delberz.) Furthermore, street names may become shortened and misspelled over centuries of use. (Example: Furrmann Weg may become Furweg over time.)

Remember, this is not a science, so use your imagination to combine words and switch or omit letters until they sound good. Some names can be long and unwieldy to say, which is appropriate particularly for German street names. It is possible to separate the elements of a long street name into smaller words. (Example: Klatsch Strasse or Sigmars Bahn.) Too much of this pseudo-German naming can make a game map look completely foreign, so it is wise to use English terms just as often as those on the following list. An even mixture of the two is recommended. (Example: Baker's Platz or Sigmar's Road.)

Assigning an address number is simple: just choose any number that sounds good. It is probably safe to assume that address-givers started numbering at one end of the street starting with number 1 and continued down the street until they ran out of buildings to number. For convenience, the buildings on one side of the street will given even numbered addresses, while those on the opposite side will be given odd numbers. This is not always the case, however.

Typically an address will be one or two digits in length, but some of the longer streets in the Empire's major cities may be as long as four digits. Buildings containing many apartments or subdivisions after the original address was assigned may find themselves with fractions. (Example: 32½ Handlers Markt for a divided or doubly-occupied property.)

Addressing schemes need not be orderly or sensible, and there are more examples of this in the Empire than city planners would believe. A building facing one street may have an address on another, if that is where the post is delivered. Occupied basements, apartments and subletting can wreak havoc on addresses, causing bizarre fractions or duplicated numbers to the dismay of messengers and postmen.

Long streets may be broken up into stretches with different names, with or without a break in the addressing scheme. Short streets may have no addresses at all. In some places letters are used instead of numbers, as is the case with buildings containing separate apartments or suites.

In many rural parts of the Empire an entirely informal system is used (such as 'the red barn by the river') and this may work just fine for villages in which there are few structures to be concerned with, to which both letters and visitors are infrequent.

The table below contains terms that may be used to create street names, or even the names of city quarters and districts, open spaces, and other locations. In conjunction with Liber Fanatica III these tables should make it possible to generate a wide variety of flavourful names for nearly any person or place that may be encountered. If those aren't enough, an English-German dictionary can be used to determine other terms that do not appear here.

When generating names, take care to blend English and pseudo-German ‘Reikspiel’ for that genuine Warhammer feel. Germanic names are immersive, but they can be distracting tongue-twisters if they are applied too generously. The look of Reikspiel words can be enhanced with an umlaut or sharp S (ß), but for the sake of clarity (and the author’s ignorance of the German language) these have been left out of this document completely. Be ruthless and creative. Roll on the Vocation table to generate a forename if you like. Use the Surname Suffix table after any forename. See the following articles in Liber Fanatica III – The Game Master’s Guide for more names: ‘Settlements of Sigmar’ (pp. 49-50) and ‘Inns of the Empire’ (p. 53-56).
