INTRODUCTION

Welcome to the book of spells.

What this book contains is a great many descriptions of spell books. Why? Because many of the bestiary entries in the Zwei-händer rules have arcane tomes in the monsters Trappings. Any and every NPC with the Incantation skill probably has at least one arcane tome.

If you are trying to throw together a quick encounter having to find which magicks a creature or NPC has takes more than a minute. In these pages you will find 666 generalist, arcane, divine and covenant magick tomes already detailed out.

Not just the spells in the book but a range of flavour and potentially useless details from the type and condition of the cover, if there is a listed author and the which language the book is written in.

Whether these details have any direct impact on your game is up to you. If no one can read Halfling then your Characters are going to have to find someone to either teach them or get the book translated.

Not every book has to be pried from the cold dead hand of your enemy. Some of them turn up in obscure back street book shops or on the shelves of university libraries.

One of the things I set out to do is eradicate entries on players record sheets that say things like "Arcane tome containing 3 lesser spells x3". No two book should be the same. Arcane tomes are not something you order from Amazon and you cannot just add a couple more copies to your shopping cart.

These book descriptions contain many minor details. Some will be obvious. Some will only come to light after some investigation. Is that cover pale leather or human skin?

Some details the Characters will never know. The players may never be confident in whether the details you are feeding them is just a piece of added flavour or a vital clue to some future quest.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

I never intended for you to read this from end to end. It is meant to be a resource you dip into as and when you need a book. If you have the print version, I suggest just pencil lining through books as you use them. You don't want the same unique text to come up twice!
